Lights Out

The Twilight Zone

Leave your Ray Bans at home and break out the night-vision goggles for Darkness Darkness, a showcase of evening imagery opening March 19 at the Three Columns Gallery. The exhibit features the work of 26 photographers, who use black-and-white materials, colored gels and other treatments to create unique nocturnal pictures. So cross the bridge to Cambridge and don't forget a flashlight.

IMPROPER Sightings!

ATTENTION BOUNTY HUNTERS! BONUS POINTS TO ANYONE WHO CAN CAPTURE AN IMPROPER READER GETTING A TATTOO FROM FANTASY ISLAND AT THE ANNUAL TATTOOFEST, HELD MARCH 27–30 IN TAMPA, FLA.

Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip. Where did you take us? Send us a picture of you or a buddy, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed IMPROPER Sightings.

Matthew McBride and Monica Vega Amor visited the Taj Mahal in Agra, India. Yesterday we walked by the Taj Boston. Take that, Matthew and Monica.

Kirsten and Dan Flaherty took a seat by the Caldeira Velha waterfall on the Portuguese island of São Miguel. The waterfall is naturally hot, just like Pamela Anderson. All natural.

Rick Friedman and his mother, Sue, had an extreme skiing experience at a little place called Aspen. Mmm, California... beautiful.

Mayor Byron Brown of Buffalo, N.Y., is a pretty happy guy, despite the fact that he lives in Buffalo, N.Y.

SHEEP SHAPE

[MARCH 20-APRIL 19]
Spring, a young man's fancy, love and all that jazz. Luckily for the rambunctious Ram, romance is not only wafting through the air, it's as prevalent as pollen. After what seems like an interminable dry spell, affectionate Venus is finally flirting with your lusty Mars ruler. How long can the infatuation last? As long as you continue to feather a suitable nest that'll nurture its growth. Mars' biannual trip through maternal Cancer is also a good time to let emotions you've held in check loose. Cry, baby; cry tears of joy.

TAURUS [April 20–May 20]
How does it go? "When you're in love, the whole world is Irish." The afterglow from a happy St. Patrick's Day celebration could carry over to Easter Monday, when your affable Venus ruler and silver-tongued Mercury exchange vows under the sign of the Fish. Congratulations are in order for successfully navigating halfway through the complicated emotional maze of a Venus-in-Pisces transit. Take time to gather your senses, to make sure your supporters are still behind you. The surprising second half is yet to come.

GEMINI [May 21–June 20]
Whenever your Mercury ruler and courageous Mars reward each other, you become a stronger, more courageous advocate for your individual interests. You can also be more insistent and, therefore, a bigger pain in the ass. Thankfully, the Mercury merger with Venus softens your demands and makes them more palatable. This three-way tie creates a rare combination of rewarding planetary forces; so while Mercury confronts critical Saturn in Virgo, don't let the problem that arises hinder your progress. Listen and learn.

CANCER [June 21–July 22]
Whatever the weather, be it stormy or sunny, the arrival of the spring equinox could send your blood coursing through your body—and never more so than this year when you have fiery Mars in your sign. Another reason to feel your temperature rising is all the attention Mars is getting from lovable Venus in Pisces, an empathetic water sign like your own. While you don't always use words to express your emotions, you shouldn't ignore the choice ones Mercury is making available. Eloquence goes hand in hand with romance.

LEO [July 23–August 22]
In the same week that your sun ruler crosses into adventurous Aries looking to break new ground, you grow more determined to deal with a matter, possibly but not necessarily financial, that has lingered far too long. If you seek professional advice, find out if the balance of power can't be tipped in your direction. Influence peddling may not be kosher, but with the change of seasons, a Lion needs to get out of the lair. Summer will be here soon enough, and you don't want anything to curtail your mobility.

VIRGO [August 23–September 22]
Winter may be officially ending, but the seductive charms of the artistic cold Fish continue to keep you involved in projects they've proposed. One of these partnerships might turn into a romance of dramatic proportions as first devastatingly beautiful Venus, then your well-versed Mercury ruler entice recalcitrant Saturn to bend the rules. Their pleas may be pretty and irresistible, but not for long. Come Easter Monday, the attraction starts to wane, and in another week, you're looking at a sudden change of hearts or minds.

LIBRA [September 23–October 22]
This week, a pivotal point can turn around Libra and the other cardinal signs so much that you may lose your footing. Along with the visible manifestations, the change of seasons has untold effects on all our psyches. However, the Scales, charged with maintaining a balance between opposing forces, often has to work harder than the rest of us to live up to its purpose. For what it's worth, you'll have help from the thoughtful, if not totally rational, pairing of loquacious Mercury and your likable Venus ruler. Speak up.

SCORPIO [October 23–November 21]
More home decorating for some, spring break skiing for others and, for a fortunate few, more romance. There's a delicious rapport developing between verbal Mercury and vivacious Venus in watery Pisces with your ballsy Mars coruler in watery Cancer. This relationship reflects particularly well on the October Scorpion. However, along with the Aries ingress and the beginning of the astrological new year comes provocation from your Pluto coruler to apply the necessary pressure to resolve the latest power play.

SAGITTARIUS [November 22–December 21] The young man whose fancy turns to thoughts of love in spring is likely to be a Sagittarius. It's in your Aries house of romance where a good deal of that action will take place. But not all of it, and not quite yet. Firstly, there's an appealing hookup between literate Mercury and luscious Venus in Pisces that can inspire poetry. Then there's a cynical Saturnian/Satanic entity in his Virgo midheaven preventing the sweet sentiments from getting through to his boss or another dastardly daddy figure. Patience, please.

CAPRICORN [December 22–January 20]
Bombarded by bliss or, bah, humbug— two ways to react to what happens when loving Venus and her consort, Mercury, face your Doubting Thomas of a Saturn ruler. Or you could simply go with the flow coming from impressionable Pisces and graciously accept whatever that imaginative sign is offering. Really interesting goods, maybe a service or two. Since Caps, like the other cardinal signs, are liable to be thrown off their game at the Aries ingress, it'll pay to bide your time before you let anxiety get the best of you.

AQUARIUS [January 21–February 18]
January Water-bearers will probably be involved in a financial matter that surfaces around St. Patrick's Day and, unlike the snakes of the Emerald Isle, won't leave—not until your eclectic Uranus ruler decides to exercise its (and your) options after Easter. So while you're not in limbo, you aren't exactly raring to go. Like the song says, "Spring can really hang you up the most." Natives born in February may have a purely personal issue to cope with, e.g., resistance from a partner who isn't buying into your blarney.

PISCES [February 19–March 19]
You can have it all, even if an ogre of a mate is standing in your way voicing objection after objection. Such is the lot of a compliant Fish who has stern Saturn dominating her Virgo marriage house. Or you could display your many charms (Venus and Mercury are joined in your sign) to desire-filled Mars in your Cancer house of pleasure and playfulness. Or you can try it both ways. If ever you were able to get away with outrageous, or even aberrant, behavior, it's now when experimental Uranus in your sign isn't catching any flak.

SPRING FLINGS

Deval Patrick and Yo-Yo Ma (above), and F. Lee Bailey and Robert B. Parker at Men in Tights

Marvel-ous...

To complement its holdings of art and ephemera, the Athenaeum hosted a comic book exhibition entitled Men in Tights, 1950 to Now, which opened with a cocktail reception.

Among the super-glittery crowd: Antiques Roadshow heartthrob Leslie Keno, Gov. Patrick and the lovely Diane, Jill Ma and her cellist husband, Yo-Yo, legendary lawyer F. Lee Bailey, Cambridge's richest novelist, Robert B. Parker, and the relentlessly social Joan, and ICA directrix Jill Medvedow, who said, "I'm not sure why we spent all that money on Lichtensteins when we could have bought old copies of Silver Surfer on eBay."

However, the evening's wittiest comment came from a woman flipping through a dog-eared edition of Spiderman, who said, "Is he hot? Listen, bub, he's got radioactive blood."

Kelly Preston and John Travolta at the KISS Concert

It's Never Too Late to Start...

As an encore to its usual flower show, the Mass. Horticultural Society hosted a Pimps and Hos party at the State Room to raise money for its ambitious proposed Winter Garden on the Rose Fitzgerald Greenway, and the invitation pretty much said it all: "You can lead a whore to culture, but you can't make her think."

The evening's specialty cocktail was a potent blend of Alize and Colt 45, while the hors d'oeuvres were served by waiters dressed as undercover cops. Present and accounted for: ubiquitous party monsters Courtney and Michael Forrester, gazillionaire Jonathan Seelig and the tastefully skanked-out Maggie, the gorgeous Laura Zecca (channeling her inner Jersey Girl) with the ever-affable Alex, best-seller factory Ben Mezrich and the stunning Tonya, and numerous women dressed as Paris Hilton and Britney Spears.

Meanwhile, several of the costumes included crack pipes, prompting socialite Doris Yaffe to exclaim, "If I knew what a great fashion accessory those were, I would've become a drug addict ages ago!"

Going to the Dogs...

Unfortunately, the MSPCA's charity fashion show at the Park Plaza, Claws and Bras, didn't go off quite as planned.

The runway show, which was supposed to feature Victoria's Secret models walking dogs down the catwalk (ironic, no?), hit a snag before it even started when a fistfight broke out between banking boy wonder Paul Karger and Bruin Milan Lucic. Things went from bad to worse when a schnauzer started sniffing a disinterested dalmatian on the runway, tripping its walker. The model is recovering at Mass. General, while the schnauzer was neutered, but event cochair Cherry Chevapravatdumrong said, "Next year, I think we'll stick to a bake sale."

King Abdullah II at the KISS Concert

Band members from KISS before their big show

Rock of Ages...

With all the big-name movie stars passing through town during the past year, it only made sense that Bono and Brad Pitt would host their major fundraiser—a reunion concert by heavy metal legends KISS—at the Citi Center for Performing Arts (aka the TD Banknorth Wang Coca-Cola Theater).

Agreeing to get back together for one sold-out show, the band attracted the likes of John Travolta and wife Kelly Preston (who said Travolta's tongue is bigger than Gene Simmons'), Eagles drummer Scott Crago, Beacon Hillions Maud and Andrew Cabot, Chestnut Hillions Betsy and Charlie Gifford, music enthusiast Steve Oristaglio and the stunning Jeryl, and His Royal Highness King Abdullah II of Jordan, who flew in just for the concert, saying, "I wouldn't miss this for all the oil in the Middle East."

The event raised money for Bono and Pitt's newest charity endeavor, Seasoning the World, which gathers up all the unused packets of soy sauce from Asian take-out and sends them to Africa, and the evening's only disappointment was that neither star could be there in person. Apparently, Pitt was home looking after the kids, and Bono was in a meeting with God.

Oh, by the way... April Fools! ×××

KELLY
AUTOMOTIVE GROUP

The Kelly Automotive Group Offers Answers to the Frequently Pondered Questions of Car Buyers.

In a world when the internet offers an array of endless automotive data, there are still fundamental questions consumers struggle with every day. So, Brian Kelly, President of the Kelly Automotive Group has produced a series of videos that answer some of these questions, in a detailed, yet easy to understand manner, without a business agenda.

There are four such videos...

- Lease Or Buy
- Best Way To Finance
- How To Read A Car Ad
- How To Choose A Dealer

"I am asked these questions everywhere I go," Brian Kelly explains. "It's time the public has a professional and inside explanation. At first glance, it would be logical to assume these videos are elongated Kelly commercials, but refreshingly they are not."

All four videos are there for your immediate viewing, right now, at kellyauto.com

Awe-Dropping

In a word, Jhumpa Lahiri inspires. Not just with her beautiful prose, but also with her success. Lahiri, who got graduate degrees at BU, won a Pulitzer Prize at age 33 for her first book, Interpreter of Maladies, then saw her second, The Namesake, adapted for the big screen. This week, she releases a new collection of short stories, Unaccustomed Earth, which treads common ground like Cambridge's Central Square. "In a way, I feel literally like an improper Bostonian," she told me during a recent phone conversation. Lucky us.

We found more inspiration this issue in Brookline at an eco-friendly home. A serial renovator, Sylvia Crawford transformed her family's ranch house into a sustainable show-stopper. The digs feature recycled wood and furniture, among other smart design elements. Get your own dose of healthy living with two pages of green goods from trendy Boston boutiques.

Finally, we catch up with Converse's CFO, whose style goes beyond the traditional suit and tie. Maybe it's because I wear Chucks to work most days, but a businessman who sports sneakers in the office says fashion inspiration to me.

THEY HAUL

In a nose-diving housing market, the obvious winners are bankruptcy lawyers and first-time home buyers. And, surely, moving companies. Somebody has to clear the sofas out of foreclosed properties, don't they?

"Actually, there's a slight drop-off [in business] overall," says Gentle Giant Movers founder and president Larry O'Toole. "But we're not complaining. You have to believe that your reputation will carry you through."

Considering that Gentle Giant does 80 to 85 percent repeat and referral business, that reputation has made O'Toole's fortune. He's a man who, it turns out, is both jolly and, in a manner of speaking, green. "I grew up on a farm in County Clare in the west of Ireland," says O'Toole, 57. "You had to do hard, physical work. With the horses." Although he was an engineer by profession, O'Toole preferred working by the sweat of his brow. "At the end of the day, you feel you've earned your dinner."

After he started his company in the early '80s, one of O'Toole's innovations was to hire upbeat, sunny movers instead of pungent louts. "I call it 'the Giant heart,'" he says. But the flip side of his employment code is stern physical conditioning. Gentle Giant movers are required to hustle. "I'm an athlete," O'Toole says. "I love the physical side of moving. Barring injury, I'd want to do it my whole life."

To test his new recruits, he has prospective employees run the stands at Harvard University's stadium. It's an exercise that allows him to spot cheaters and shirkers who may not fit in with the company spirit.

"I wouldn't ask them to do it if I wouldn't do it myself," O'Toole says. "People feel proud of the time they can do it in. It creates a bond, like the Marines."

Drink of the Moment

Take Flight

No. 9 Park has a decidedly uptown reputation, but its bar maintains the spirit of that place down the hill. "It's a bit like Cheers, where everyone knows your name," bar manager John Gertsen says.

Gertsen's role would be Cliff Clavin—younger, more stylish but with the same fathomless depth of arcana. Throw one back with Gertsen, and he'll proudly detail Russian drinking customs, provide the exact definition of "neat" and explain how they get a whole pear inside bottles of Poire William.

The love for hooch history is all over the cocktail list. "We're a bar that likes to look at classics," Gertsen says. "When you look at the early 20th century to right before prohibition, that was a very furtive period, and we all battled each other on eBay looking for old drink books." Luckily, the bar offers the House Specialty Flight, giving newcomers a mini-crash course.

If you're a gimlet drinker, begin with the Palmyra, which, depending on whom you ask, is either named for a desert in the Middle East or the area of Amelia Earhart's last recorded transmission. This sweet-and-sour bev is a mix of vodka, mint, fresh lime juice and homemade, mint-infused simple syrup. It's bright, acidic and benefits from a pressed mint garnish because, as Gertsen will tell you, the tongue has no sensor for mint.

The pear martini is a blend of vodka, Belle de Brillet, Poire William and pear nectar, and it succeeds with an attention to texture and flavor balance. Explains Gertsen, "The tannins from the cognac come from the skin, and the sweet of the fruit comes from the liquor." The result is an earthy, sugared body without the cloying pucker of many fruity cocktails.

Last is the No. 10, combining Tanqueray 10, Campari and grapefruit juice. "The No. 10 is the one that surprises people the most, because a lot of people have tried Campari and decided they didn't like it, but this has a way of getting a new flavor from those three ingredients." It's both earthy and tart, as the darker flavor of the Campari blends with the juniper. With a grapefruit wash, it finishes cleaner and brighter that you'd expect.

Following the flight, you just might have a new favorite cocktail. On your next visit Gertsen may not know your name, but he'll fill you in on the 1916 advancements of barman Hugo Enslen.

ALL THE TRIMMINGS

To all those gearing up for the Final Four: As much as we'd kill to rally in the stands in San Antonio and gorge on Southern barbecue, we're going to feed our March Madness with a hearty helping of food and fixin's from one of this city's best joints. The pitmasters at Blue-Ribbon—who heap on hospitality like ketchup on fries—get their Kansas City–style brisket ends chewy-tender before customers douse them in sauce. We wouldn't consider making it to tip-off without them. Or without the homemade pickles.

Question for Mark Kopko

What are three keys to starting your own business?

Michael Kopko, 23, is the founder and CEO of Dormaid (dormaid.com), a company that offers personal services to college students on nearly 2,000 campuses nationwide. Kopko started the business during his freshman year at Harvard.

Make sure your idea is nationally scaled or at least has national appeal. About two years after we started, I realized it was sort of silly to try and build an entire empire on cleaning rooms. So now we're adjusting. You have to take a step back and see if you think what you're doing can get swallowed on the national level.

Be careful with governance within your business. It's natural when you're younger to want to extend and split everything amongst your buddies, but all it takes is one guy to say they don't want to do it anymore and things become a mess. We survived early on by never cutting ourselves up into pieces, and now we're moving in a direction where we can start to let others own a small portion of the business.

Be prepared to out-research your opponents, and don't worry if your model isn't perfect. When we started, we really didn't know what our plan of attack was and there were times when we were trigger-shy. But you can't have that approach.

Going Out

MOTHER OF INVENTION

She hides indignation with shifts and fidgets.

"We did everything we could to make it work in Bay Village," Hungry Mother co-owner Rachel Miller Munzer says with a twitch. "It is what it is."

The 30-year-old Munzer and her husband, Alon, are best known for Rachel's Kitchen, the teeny in size, massive in street cred cafe. In 2006, they found a larger venue to build their neighborhood dream spot. But due to bad luck and bureaucracy, things fell apart. The details of that demise are chronicled on Hungry Mother's Web site, four full paragraphs before the words "hungry" or "mother" even show up.

Opened March 18 in Kendall Square, Hungry Mother is a hiking-booted step into the world of fine dining, a juxtaposition that plays throughout the decor. Mason jars sit next to wine glasses. Restrooms are adorned with the pages of Mastering the Art of French Cooking or The Virginia Housewife. A skillet and a ham sack hang in a converted library. It's Julia Child meets Jed Clampett.

Appropriately, the cuisine is countrified French, prepared by former Lumière chef Barry Maiden. "I'm tapping into my roots and bringing back the peasant food of rural Virginia," Maiden says. "I've taken what I've learned in fancy French restaurants and applied it to Southern ingredients."

Local and sustainable when possible, Maiden's ingredients also include many house-made items, from mayo to bacon. "I'm blown away seeing the amount of prep work going into each dish," Munzer observes.

Patrons at the 55-seat spot can snack on boiled peanuts ($3) before digging into starters, which include barbecue quail with fried green tomatoes ($12), and entrees, like bourbon-braised pork shoulder with creamy grits ($19). "Garnished with ribs, it's got that Southern, rustic touch," Maiden says.

A full bar—the No. 10 features bourbon, sweet tea and limoncello ($9)—will help foster the late-night crowd and the neighborhood spirit the Munzers had envisioned two years ago and crossed the river to find. Explains Munzer, "Whether you're coming from Bristol Street or Milton, it's the feeling that everyone that comes in feels they belong."

MAGAZINE MATCH

TO WHOM IT may concern:
Four years ago, The Improper was at an event that Paul Pierce sponsored and snapped some photos. You happened to take a picture of Paul Pierce and two other guys. One of the guys in the photo became my fiancé. And the reason for us getting together was because of that photo. In September 2003, I had just started working at the Statehouse. I was invited to another office for cake to celebrate someone's birthday. While I was there, I saw this very cute guy. We met very briefly, and then I didn't see him again. I often thought about this mystery guy and wondered if I would ever bump into him again. A few weeks later I went out to lunch and picked up The Improper and was skimming through when I saw this mystery guy in a picture with Paul Pierce! I was happy because now I knew his name! I thought I could let him know that he was in The Improper and hoped that would spark up a conversation! I sent him an e-mail, saying how we had briefly met and how he was in the magazine. We continued to chat back and forth, then he asked me to coffee and so on, and on Saturday night we got engaged at the Statehouse, where we first met! I thank The Improper for helping me find my soul mate. If he hadn't been in your publication, I don't think I would have ever found him or had the nerve to talk to him.

Lauren

To the cab driver with whom I argued on March 18 on the on-ramp from Quincy to I-93 North:

I apologize for the incident and would like you to know that we Bostonians are not all that bad. It's a shame, but there is so much aggression on the roads and highways of Boston that I had a lapse in etiquette while driving. I want you to know that I felt bad after the fact, and I hope that you will accept my apology. Anyone who may experience road rage should take into consideration, "Is this what I have become?" I am a person with an aggressive personality and am sometimes short of temper, but before you get out of your car, you should think about the situation first. My apologies to the cab driver; I hope that you and anyone else will not look upon Bostonian drivers as insensitive. Courtesy goes a long way.

REAL ESTATE
HARD TIMES, SMART DESIGNS

As the recession continues to turn its brown eye on the fortunes of millions of Americans the housing market is plummeting at an unbelievable rate. But even if you're forced to pick up and relocate to a van down by the river, that doesn't mean the inside of your van can't look nice. Kristine Irving, owner of the Charles Street boutique Koo de Kir and interior designer extraordinaire, gave us some cost-cutting advice that'll keep your place looking cool while your wallet stays fat (or just less thin).

"The best tip is to make sure you know what you're paying for. Before you hire a general contractor, you have to know the scope of your project. Think about all the possibilities up front. One of the easiest ways to lose money and go over budget is something I call 'scope creep.' What happens is you call in a contractor and get a price, which is based on what the contractor understands the scope of the work to be. And then, as you're in the designing process, you start adding a bunch of little things, and before you know it you're looking at a dozen change orders and paying 30 per cent more than you planned. One of the best ways to avoid that is to really have it planned all the way through. Get a designer to help you understand the full potential of your space. You'll spend so much more money when you start thinking of things midway through the project."

Yeah—take that, recession! Now if you'll excuse us, we need to try and remember where we parked our house.

MIND OVER MATTER

Tricking Ourselves

AS PSYCHOLOGISTS EXPLORE and as marketers gleefully exploit, our weird little minds are forever going about things in ways that just aren't reasonable. MIT professor Dan Ariely gets to the bottom of it in Predictably Irrational: The Hidden Forces That Shape Our Decisions. According to the many sly experiments Ariely has administered, people make choices that are actually disadvantageous like accepting a free, inferior chocolate over a discounted, fancier one. Testing the effect of arousal on sexual choice, men are asked to imagine what they would consider doing erotically, when offered spicy and beyond-kinky possibilities. In a "cold" state their answers are somewhat restrained, but in a "hot" state—compliments of racy pictures—they confess that their thundering libidos would gallop way outside the lines. Slight versions of the same thing—a larger or smaller bread-making machine, an imagined date with a movie-star–ish guy or the same guy, disguised to look less handsome—can seem irrationally different depending on inner and imposed trickery. Ariely's cautionary tales make our self-deceptions both entertaining and shocking—credit-card debt insanity, ordering food we don't like to conform to our companions and whistling-in-the-dark unsafe sex.

INTERIOR BEAUTY Hudson hawks furnishings.

Treating Ourselves

HUDSON IS A MINI-showroom version of a South End apartment, with furnishings both unique and arresting, often understatedly. A cowhide rug lies near a brown leather headboard decorated with nail heads. In the back, floral wallpaper speaks authoritatively in a small space, highlighting a yellow chest of drawers and a buffet with a beveled glass top. Wing chairs and sofas of a peaceful shape and color are organic and can be custom-ordered to accommodate your particular needs. Pillows display the nostalgically faded logos of yesteryear, while Modern Alchemy candles make perfect gifts. Locals love to wander through the small shop, which won our 2007 Boston's Best award for home store. Lucky for suburbanites, a second Hudson opened March 1 in Wellesley. Although it has more of a retail feel with higher ceilings, this latest store boasts its own treasures, featuring different items from many of the same vendors like Bungalow 5, Oly and Verellen—making it worth the trip.

Ask Al Capone to recommend the best of his homemade pastas and he's likely to pause, furrow his brow and grimace. "Oh, I can't pick favorites," Capone replies with gruff humor. "They're like my children." Silly question, really. But even the boss himself (note: no relation to Scarface) can't help but point those perusing his stocked-to-the-ceiling salumeria to the custom-cut egg noodle strands—including saffron, ginger, tarragon and jet-black squid ink—not to mention the cold cases lined with pumpkin ravioli, black-pepper–pecorino gnocchi and more than two dozen sauces brewed in the back kitchen. If you have a free hand, be sure to grab a fresh-piped cannoli on your way out.

Wine, Wedding and 'Woods

LAST SEASON, THE FIRST CROP of specialty wines cheerfully named for Red Sox players—Manny Being Merlot, Schilling Schardonnay and Wakefield CaberKnuckle—had a great rookie year, selling more than a quarter million bottles and raising more than $330,000 for charities selected by individual players. This year's lineup from Longball Cellars introduces David Ortiz's Vintage Papi, Jason Varitek's Captain's Cabernet and—the most delightful of all—SauvignYoouuk Blanc. Credit goes to Kevin Youkilis, the only player who named his own wine, after hearing the initial proposal for "ZinfanYooooouukkkk."

AFTER TWO-PLUS YEARS as the cutest engaged couple on Boston's restaurant scene, why haven't Joanne Chang and Christopher Myers set a wedding date? "We're quite happy the way we are now; we'd stay engaged forever if we could," Chang says, adding that the thought of a big wedding "scares the bejeesus out of both of us." Nevertheless, she drops two hints: "We might try next month" and "My brother lives in Vegas.... That's always an option."

GIVEN THE RISING PRICE of gas, could Foxwoods Resort Casino vie for your destination-dining dollars? Draws include an under-two-hours drive time, an increasingly appealing range of venues operated by New York–based top chefs and the soon-to-open MGM Grand Resort, with extra space devoted to nongambling recreation. At Foxwoods' Grand Pequot Tower, David Burke, perhaps best known for David Burke & Donatella in Manhattan, is establishing a presence with David Burke Prime, a 280-seat steakhouse boasting a 35-foot-tall wine tower, a dry-aging room built from pink Himalayan rock salt and beef that traces its provenance to a Kentucky bull called Prime. Dining { J. CHARLES MOKRISKI }

ITALIAN ON THE HILL

RIGA-TONY Beacon Hill diners indulge in dishes like rigatoni norcina with sausage and black truffle puree.

When I first moved to Boston almost two decades ago, Beacon Hill held a fascination for me. This bastion of Brahmin exclusivity bespoke wealth and power—from the elegant brick and brownstone townhouses of upper Walnut and Chestnut streets, to hidden treasures in narrow alleys approaching Charles, to the stately Victorians on the reclaimed land of the flats. One thing I didn't associate with this neighborhood, though, was fine dining. I imagined the magnificent residences on the Hill inhabited by frugal Yankees, who, I supposed, husbanded their trust fund resources by surviving on a diet of boiled cod and baked beans, except for the occasional ceremonial visit to Locke-Ober.

That was a long time ago, and the Beacon Hill of my imagination may well have been apocryphal even then. More recently, a minor restaurant revolution has been in progress in this tony neighborhood, and a refurbished and rejuvenated Toscano is one of the players. I had tried Toscano in the early '90s and found it satisfactory but unsatisfying, its aspirational reach exceeding its pedestrian grasp. Within the last few months, however, this Italian spot has been taken over and renovated by youthful new owners, transforming its spacious interior into an ensemble of handsome, well-appointed rooms with dark-wood paneling, large semi-spherical sconces and chandeliers, brown chairs, exposed brick walls and large paned windows looking out onto Beacon Street.

Crisp white napery and oversized wineglasses, a basket of warm foccacia and crusty Tuscan loaves set a welcome tone. Toscano's wine list is another pleasant surprise, with some affordable choices—including a decent 2005 Santa Cristina sangiovese by Antinori ($27), fruity but well structured, and Lucilla, a blend of sangiovese, cabernet sauvignon and merlot (sometimes called "Super Tuscan") that was full-bodied and bursting with flavor ($30). Despite the decent bread, we also ordered a pizza with house-made sausage and a first-rate crust ($15) as we perused the large but not unwieldy menu. A platter of antipasti called assaggi della casa ($19) contained a luxurious assortment of cured meats. Crostini di fegatini—toasts smeared with chicken liver pâté—olives of various sizes and colors, generous wedges of sharp cheese and roasted red peppers completed the array.

Tiramisu

Pastas included "burro e salvia," handmade spinach-ricotta ravioli with butter and sage ($18), wonderful in texture but a tad flat until enlivened with Parmesan and pepper; tagliatelle boscaiola ($16), whose sauce could've used a little more moisture to complement the flavor of the woodsy, wild mushrooms; and our favorite, the rigatoni norcina ($19), thick tube noodles with a superlative sauce of ground sausage and rich, black truffle puree.

Main courses tread familiar channels, with saltimbocca alla Romano ($27) and osso buco ($29) leading the way. The saltimbocca, a thin veal cutlet, covered with overlapping layers of thinly sliced prosciutto and fontina cheese, came bathed in a delicious gravy that enhanced a large dollop of smooth, creamy mashed potatoes. Osso buco, the star among these dishes, emerged fork-tender from its slow casserole cooking with carrots, a slight touch of tomato and aromatic herbs. Merluzzo in acquapazza ($26), cod poached in "crazy water," combined slightly soft but satisfactory texture with a welcome touch of spring in cherry tomatoes and sweet peas. Finally, tutto pepe ($32), a slice of beef tenderloin in a rich brandy cream sauce, served up tender, flavorful meat.

Desserts were delightful. Tiramisu ($8) arrived in an oversized martini glass, its texture perfect, neither soupy nor dry, with a restrained dash of alcohol that matched its mellow sweetness. Pistachio gelato ($8) delivered intense flavor. Blueberry torte ($8) featured plump, fresh berries buried whole in a perfect pastry cream. These sweet indulgences constituted perfect denouements to two stellar dinners. At last, Toscano lives up to Beacon Hill's reputation. ✖✖✖

THE GREAT REBATE

Uncle Sam's sending money your way. Here's how to spend it.

The other day I got my notice in the mail that the ballyhooed federal tax rebate is forthcoming. Naturally, I got excited about this, because I love free money and don't understand budget deficits. The best part about the tax rebate? Since it's supposed to stimulate the economy, your patriotic duty as an American requires you spend it on something silly. You can't use this money to pay down your credit card or merely prevent your car from being repossessed—you need to go buy something, and the more frivolous the better.

Fortunately for you, there's no shortage of merchandise out there waiting for your $1,200. (That's the amount headed for qualifying households, so that's what I'm working with here.) Personally, I'm a fiend for used stuff, and while economists might say that your money will better stimulate the economy if you buy something new, I say that if your $1,200 lands in the pocket of someone who turned a golf cart into a tow truck, that's a guy who's now got $2,400 that will definitely be spent wisely.

About that golf cart–turned–tow truck: This is why I'm not allowed to look at Craigslist and Uncle Henry's anymore, because golf cart–tow trucks are exactly the sort of items that I need in my life. I mean, this thing's got fur seats, a lift kit, a light bar on the roof and tow boom. There's a faux-wood dashboard. It's going for $1,600, but I bet you could get it down to $1,200. It's for sale in Maine, which probably goes without saying.

Further Craigslist research reveals that your tax rebate could get you a breast pump, a 14-foot boat, a backyard ice rink and 38 coins for the Good Time Emporium. And then you'd still have $1,200 to spend, because all that stuff is free. I know, I know—that's kinda gross, though, right? You never know who's been using a backyard ice rink.

If you want to spend your $1,200 all at once, you could buy a walk-in refrigerator, a Whizzer scooter, a memory foam mattress, a push cart, a 1996 Pontiac Sunfire or a 1993 Plymouth Sundance. Sunfire or Sundance? Used mattress or Whizzer? Daydreaming of such extravagance, I now have a sense of what it must feel like to win the lottery.

Of course, you don't have to spend your money all in one place, and when I get my $1,200 I'll probably invest a little bit here, a little bit there—$300 for a large lighted sign that says "Figero's Pizza," $800 for a chainsaw carving of an owl, $100 for a grow light ("for all your growing needs"). And presto: economy stimulated! I don't want to bore you with my sophisticated micro-macroeconomic knowledge, but this is a classic example of what's known as the butterfly effect—I buy this pizza sign for $300, then I spend more money to change my name to "Figero," then I enroll in pizza-making school, then I take out a loan to open a pizza parlor, then I have to buy mustache-care products and boxes emblazoned with my likeness, until eventually I own a chain of successful eateries that employ more than 700 people. So it's not just me buying a sign from a guy named Figero who wasn't very good at making pizza. That's only the seed that spawns a beautiful money tree. Same deal with the chainsaw owl and, especially, the grow light.

The great thing about this tax rebate is that it benefits all Americans, except those who make slightly more than $150,000. Then you'll probably get nothing (the rebate phases out for household incomes over 174 grand), so I'd advise you not to look at Craigslist and see what you're missing. Then again, if you make that much money, you can probably already afford a $200 hospital doll ("female gender"), a $20 family of "Snow People" ("They range from 13" to 19" tall, and they're sold in a family of 4. They are handmade and soooo cute. Very cute.") or 15 previously viewed adult DVDs ("a great gift"). Heck, you've probably already got rooms full of hospital dolls, Snow People and used adult DVDs, in which case I don't feel bad about you not getting the rebate, you rich creep.

Obviously there are lots of great ways to stimulate the economy, and these are just a small sample. For my part, I'm quite intrigued by this ad: "I am doing personal rants for a small charge." I never realized I could commission a rant, but now that I think about it, I would absolutely pay for a good rant, and possibly even the occasional rave. Subject No. 1: I bought a golf cart–tow truck; why are we still in a recession? Go! ✖✖✖

The Dance { JOHN D. SPOONER }

CALIFORNIA DREAMIN'

Healthcare and natural medicine make the Golden State go round.

I first visited Santa Barbara some years ago as a punishment, inflicted on me by a movie producer who had hired me to write a screenplay. "You've got too many temptations in L.A. I'm getting you out of here, just you and me on the beach in Santa Barbara." At the time of this announcement, I was staying at the Cavalier Hotel in West L.A., an early "all-suites" fancy motel, built as a two-tiered horseshoe surrounding a small swimming pool. It was a wonderful show-business place, full of writers on long-term contracts and actors in town for short-run plays. My sin one day was sneaking back from writing to watch the Alvin Ailey dancers do a number of routines at the pool. My producer arrived, checking on me, and screamed, "Not on my nickel. Back to work." This fit right in with what I'd read about how writers get treated in Hollywood. But my producer said, "Here's the dirty little secret. You guys love it. You got the bug, the itch, you buy into the dream of the three cherries that someday you'll hit it BIG. You'll be an addict, too." Of course, he was right. So he Shanghaied me up the coast to Santa Barbara where he locked me in a room for three days to write.

I returned this winter, renting a house for several weeks, to escape February in Boston and to visit dear friends who grew up in this bubble of beauty, where Oprah and Brad Pitt seek refuge and Jon Peters, who was married to Streisand, has traded styling shears for many horses. Originally, this was conservative country. But now, it seems, Obama rules. I even spied a big Barack sign in the window of the Montecito Post Office. Isn't that illegal? Still, speaking to people—from waiters to retired executives to college kids—I got the impression that the economy is the main concern. And by election time, I'd guess finances will top your list. So what do Californians have on the mind that differs from Bostonians?

Well, healthcare and natural medicine. I heard comments from all ages on the benefit of vitamins versus no vitamins, the major use of chiropractors and the search for "healers," people with magic hands who can cure almost anything with touch. A man I met at a party told me, "Prostate cancer," as if he were saying, "Plastics." "Don't take omega fish-oil pills," he went on. "Useless. Three things will prevent prostate trouble: Eat two deep-sea fish a week, colorful veggies and pomegranates." Everyone in California, it seems, has a different secret to eternal youth. Bring it on.

"You'd be amazed how much marijuana is still part of the creative life."

At the same party a woman told me, "You'd be amazed how much marijuana is still part of the creative life here. A few years ago, I baked some zucchini bread laced with weed for a famous architect who wanted to give it to another really famous architect. I sliced off a wedge to hand to a friend with insomnia, telling him he'd sleep like a baby. But after eating it, he stayed awake for three days."

Needless to say, I brought three French cuffed shirts out there and two bow ties, and they stayed in the closet. The only ties I saw in two weeks were on waiters. For years Boston fashion seemed to me an oxymoron, but California gives bad taste a whole new definition: cowboy boots with field hockey skirts? Bikers in caftans? We went to a farmers' market on a Saturday morning, where the '60s are in full force. There were "Make love not war" T-shirts and hippies that made Woodstock look like a tea dance at the old Ritz. And, of course, an "Impeach Bush" booth right next to the "freshest eggs in California" booth. One conversation I overheard: "Wind farms will kill us all. Because they kill bats and bats eat all the bad insects and disease will then doom us because the infestations will destroy all crops."

But I loved it. It was beautiful at the same time Boston had a wind chill of 15 below. California makes me smile every time I drive by a storefront that offers "gay home loans." A local paper printed this correction about a story: "DJ Pallidino wishes to express that his online quip about potentially getting laid at the film festival was meant in jest and nothing more." Right. And finally, the best bumper sticker: "Monica Lewinsky's ex-boyfriend's wife for President." As a surfer said to me on Butterfly Beach, "Have an awesome life. Lose the East, dude." ×××

JERRY REMY, THE FINAL FOUR, PACMAN JONES AND NBA PLAYOFFS

3 Premature Playoff Thoughts

Paging Tony Delk and Rodney Rogers... Of the four potential No. 8 seeds in the East, we're least looking forward to the Hawks. They have a veteran presence at the point with Mike Bibby and seem just young and dumb enough to ignore the pressure of playoff hoops. Then there's Joe Johnson, a guy who probably would love to shove a first-round upset up the collective ass of the organization that traded him away.

Tommy, We're Live in Three... Let's not tell Tommy Heinsohn that ABC and TNT have the rights to NBA playoff basketball. He doesn't need to know. Just set up a little cardboard booth under the tunnel at the Garden, give him a mike and yell, "Action!" Everyone wins.

Eeny Meeny Miney Powe... One cause for concern? The rotation. Doc's like a mad scientist out there most nights. Leon Powe's the first off the bench in the first half, then doesn't play in the second. Big Baby plays a solid 20 minutes, then doesn't see the floor for two straight games. At some point there needs to be some consistency. It's one thing to guess on substitutions in the regular season, but in the playoffs you'll eventually get burned.

1 FORECAST FOR RAIN

Or making it rain. Rumor has it the Pats are interested in Pacman Jones, but you've got to wonder if it's worth it. Randy Moss had problems, but tapping a meter maid with your car is one thing (we get road rage); having a hand in a strip-club shooting that paralyzes a guy is another. Pacman's a bad, bad dude—unless he's reading this, in which case we're obviously kidding. Play on, playa.

5 ON "THE SOX GO TO JAPAN"

Dice-Ball Four... Sure, he struggled in 2007, but after finishing the season on a high note, we expected Dice-K to come out firing in 2008. Eh, not so much. New season. Same Dice-K. He nibbled his way around an A's lineup that boasted about as much power as a key-chain flashlight, and departed in the sixth with nothing to show for it but a forgettable no-decision.

Got Some Jet Lag, Dawg?... That first Oakland game with the A's was the crankiest we've seen Jerry Remy in a while. Of course, he wasn't too tired to plug the Remy Awards a dozen times, but he was incredibly irritated at Japanese fans for overreacting to fly balls, and when Don Orsillo was goofing around and modeling a new kimono in the booth, RemDawg not only declined to laugh, but gave a look that would've made you think Don had just farted and locked all the windows.

Don't Keep This on the DL... You couldn't have written a more stereotypical start to JD Drew's season. Here's the deal: We're trying to like you, JD. We want to give you another chance. Why won't you let us? Why are you forcing us to crap on you in this space for another 162 games? It doesn't have to be this way.

Second to None... Two games are in the books and we've already written off the possibility of a sophomore slump for Dustin Pedroia. When it comes to confidence, he's the anti–Dice K. Pedroia seems like the kind of guy who jumps up to touch street signs that look out of his reach, just to prove he can do it.

Chew on This... Despite a long, stressful trip to Japan, it looks like Terry Francona's still holding strong in the fight to rid himself of tobacco. We're happy for Tito, but it doesn't feel right watching him force down sunflower seeds in the dugout. It's like Keith Richards chewing on toothpicks instead of smoking cigarettes.

2 GUYS. ONE RACE.

Naturally, a point guard will have a distinct advantage in any test of speed against a big man, but we'd still be fascinated to watch a 100-yard dash between Kendrick Perkins and Sam Cassell (like when we watched a man race a giraffe on FOX a couple years ago). When Sam I Am takes off down the court he looks like a mime pretending to run in hurricane-force winds with a deployed parachute strapped to his back. And Perk, well, we're not sure we'd call that running, but whatever it is, it's done very deliberately.

4 DATES TO WATCH

4/2 Baseball's first ever nine-day, four-game series ends as the Sox take on the A's in Oakland. Mr. Selig, we're more than familiar with your penchant for royally effing up any and all significant Major League Baseball matters, but you outdid yourself with this Japan trip. Honestly though, we're not even mad. It's amazing.

4/5 The Final Four tips off in San Antonio, which would be a lot more fun if you weren't tied for last place in your office pool with the lady from accounting who owns 17 cats.

4/8 First the good news: It's Opening Day at Fenway, with the Sox taking on the Tigers. Now the bad: It's also the start of a grueling 20-games-in-20-days stretch for the Sox. Thanks again, Commish!

4/14 The Celtics visit Madison Square Garden for a night of epic historical proportions: the (very likely) final game of Isiah Thomas' reign in New York. This is for Knicks fans what Castro's death was for Cubans, or will be for Cubans, or ... you know what we mean.

Soroff On JOE LIGOTTI

The Guy From Boston tells us what he thinks about... well, everything.

A phenomenon that began on the Internet and has since spread to television with appearances on the Tonight Show and a semiregular gig on Fox, the Guy From Boston is the outspoken and often outrageous Joe Ligotti, 42. Born and raised in the Boston area, he lived in East Boston, Revere, Malden and Everett and went to work at Logan Airport after high school. When his nephew began his third tour of duty in Iraq, Ligotti began posting his online rants, which rapidly became a hit with U.S. troops overseas. His motto, "I got the balls to say what you're thinking," comes with a lot of finger-pointing and an ever-present cigar. Ligotti lives with his wife and two children north of the city.

Jonathan Soroff: So you went to Harvard...
Joe Ligotti: [Laughs.] Yeah, right. I might've dated a couple of pre-med students there, but that's about it.

So how did this whole thing start?
My nephew was going to Iraq for the third time and he was a little homesick, leaving a baby at home, so I decided to send him little bits and pieces of the stuff we used to do: eating hot dogs, swearin' and yellin', smokin' cigars and lyin' about all the broads we fed. That's how it came about.

So it's spread like wildfire, mostly because of the troops?
Yeah, it started with the guys overseas. I'd send something, and they'd all line up to listen to it. So a buddy of mine said, "Let's do this dot-com thing," and I go, "Who the f wants to listen to a 400-pound guinea whack-job?" But all through word of mouth, it took off.

You've done Fox and Friends, Leno.... How did he find out about you?
I think I have Percocet to thank for that. His executive producer was home with a neck injury over Thanksgiving, and someone sent her an e-mail of me. She started going through the videos online and said to the booker, "I want this guy." They all thought she was whacked out on drugs, but Jay Leno showed it to his father, and he said, "You've gotta have this guy on the show."

Anything you ever regretted saying?
I'd have to say no. I think I regret how people have interpreted things I've said. I'm not a mean person. I say things from the heart and I say things no one else dares to say.

How does your wife put up with you?
An awful lot of alcohol and foot rubs, I guess.

A lot of people would assume you're a right-wing homophobic, misogynistic bigot. What do you have to say to that?
Absolutely not. I might not agree with your core principles or whatever, but I'll defend to the death your right to have them. I'm not anti-anything. I have gay friends, black friends, Mexican friends. I believe America has a place for everyone. I'm a loudmouth, but what I say isn't hateful. It's just ballsy.

Most famous person you've met, besides Jay Leno?
Well, Fox had me cover that screening of the HBO John Adams miniseries at the library and it's got to be Tom Hanks. I brought him a box of chocolates, and I asked him to sign it to my wife.

Best part of your new-found celebrity?
It's like sex to me. I love being noticed. I love being the center of attention. But being able to make a difference is huge. I'm gonna run a charity golf tournament for autism and mentally challenged folks.

Who's louder: you or the planes over East Boston?
Me. No question. Piss me off and you'll understand that a 767 is nowhere near as loud.

Do you snore?
I used to, but now I wear this mask. I've got sleep apnea. I've got everything. I'm overweight. I smoke cigars. I like to drink cognac and Scotch. I swear a lot. I spit. I fart. And I burp.

How many cigars do you smoke a day?
Probably two. And then if I'm at a party or something, I might smoke more, and it depends on how much I drink. The more I drink, the more I smoke.

So what is it about you that people love so much?
I've got great tits. They used to sit up a bit better, but still...

Best swag you've gotten since becoming a celebrity?
This lunch is pretty good. [Laughs.] No, I guess the barbecue set and apron that I got from the Tonight Show. But the best swag I get is when somebody recognizes me and shakes my hand and gives me a hug.

Most out of place you've ever felt?
I don't. Everywhere I go, I blend in.

Joe, no offense, but you don't really blend in anywhere.
OK, but I mean I'm just as happy having a coffee at Café Vittoria in the North End or eating crème brûlée with a gay friend at Club Café, or having drinks at the governor's inauguration. I'm comfortable in pretty much any situation.

So how do you see yourself?
I think I'm a guy who doesn't color within the lines and we need that. People have to step out of bounds every once in a while and say what they feel, because political correctness, just like affirmative action, has its place but it shouldn't rule our lives. If Ben Franklin, John Adams, George Washington and Paul Revere had been politically correct, we'd be sitting here eating crumpets. So we, as Bostonians, should take the lead in being politically incorrect and speak our minds.

Who are your fans?
Obviously, a lot of 'em are military folks, something like 700,000 hits from military installations around the world. That's my proudest stat I have, and I can never repay those folks for protecting my family's liberty. But then there are housewives in Wisconsin and Arizona and truck drivers from San Diego or Spokane, Wash., along with the more white-collar stock-broker types who have seen me on Fox with Neil Cavuto. It's very diverse.

Last question: If you're the Guy From Boston, can I be the Guy From Newton?
Well, sure, but I think you're gonna have to put on a little weight. ✖✖✖

THE INTERPRETER OF LIFE

BU alum Jhumpa Lahiri finds meaning in a new collection of short stories.

BY MEGAN LISAGOR PHOTOGRAPH BY BILL WADMAN

For more than a year, I gave away copies of Jhumpa Lahiri's first book, Interpreter of Maladies, about Indian immigrants and their children. Like a sinner who finds God, I had to spread the word. It moved me, and when Lahiri won the 2000 Pulitzer Prize for fiction, it felt like religious validation. It didn't matter that my parents weren't Bengali, or foreigners even; I related to her characters and their ruminations on relationships and love. Torn between a career in academia and journalism, I was especially struck by one narrator's words: "There are times I am bewildered by each mile I have traveled, each meal I have eaten, each person I have known, each room in which I have slept. As ordinary as it all appears, there are times when it is beyond my imagination." It wasn't such a weighty decision, I realized. My life would have meaning either way.

Lahiri, now 40, stared down a similar path: after earning three master's degrees and a doctorate at Boston University, she left the university world to pursue writing. For bibliophiles, it was a lucky choice. Her freshman attempt, Interpreter of Maladies, was crowned the New Yorker Debut of the Year and awarded the PEN/Hemingway Award, in addition to the Pulitzer. The Namesake followed, a novel I also consumed, though more like a flavorful piece of gum, enjoyed and then set aside. It spent 48 weeks on the best-seller list and spawned a movie starring Kal Penn from Harold & Kumar Go to White Castle. Lahiri, who has the looks of an actress, had pop-culture cred.

But she wasn't distracted. "I had a couple stories on the backburner that I'd been working on during the The Namesake, these kind of half-baked things, old ideas that have been with me for the past decade," Lahiri told me recently from her home in Brooklyn, where she lives with her husband and two children. Not just ideas but characters, Hema and Kaushik, a girl and a boy who meet in suburban Massachusetts, a landscape she knows well. "Boston was the first place my parents came from London," she recalled. "They met so many of the people in that one year who became their closest friends, fellow Bengali immigrant[s]." In the case of Hema and Kaushik "everything is invented, but I did [have] that life of being very young and living in Central Square. It's easy for me to imagine those situations."

The pair first appeared in a New Yorker fiction piece, a sign that a third book might be in the works. But not another novel; Lahiri had a different form in mind. "I wanted to write a longer, deeper, richer type of [short] story," she explained. "Having written a novel, I was able to draw on other kinds of resources to have things unfold in a more leisurely way." For the first time as an author, she wondered what would happen to Hema and Kaushik beyond the story's bounds, much as a reader feels after finishing a good book. So she continued their narrative, adding, "I almost couldn't bear to say good-bye."

A trio of Hema-Kaushik stories join five others in Lahiri's Unaccustomed Earth, out this week. Unlike The Namesake, which centers on one family's conflicts with identity, these tales dissect all sorts of relationships, whether between fathers and daughters or sisters and brothers. To me, they feel familiar on many levels; I can imagine returning to them time and again. "I was getting more and more interested, and remain so, in really wanting to explore family relationships—situations I hope are common to every family, losing parents, estrangement, rivalry—not just the immigrant experience." And she's only just begun. "I had that moment of clarity. It's nice to feel settled in that way. I'm slowly, I hope, starting up a novel based on a family."

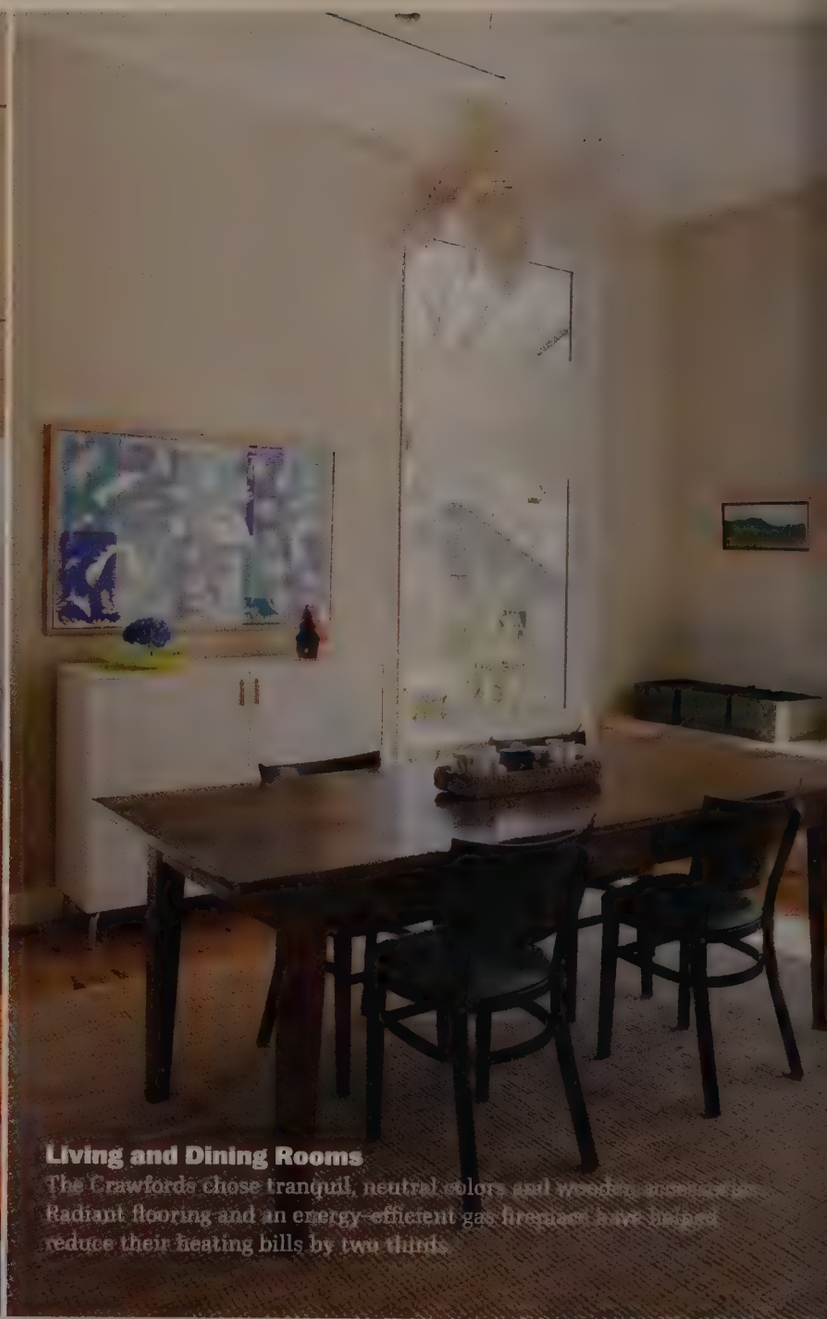
GOOD LIVING

A GREEN HOUSE GROWS IN BROOKLINE.

BY LISA PIERPONT PHOTOGRAPHS BY MICHAEL PIAZZA

Sylvia Crawford fancies her sun-soaked home as "light green." A modest description, considering she pulled all-nighters researching certified forest wood, heat recovery systems and solar energy to transform her newly purchased fixer-upper ranch house into an eco-friendly masterpiece. "It needed tons of work, which I completely love," Crawford says. "The land was southern-facing with lots and lots of sun exposure—perfect for reducing heating costs." She'd had her eye on the land for years while living with her husband, Blair, and two young sons just a street away in a rambling Victorian, much more characteristic of Brookline's swanky Fisher Hill Estates. When the ranch hit the market, the Crawford men knew the stay-at-home mom turned serial renovator had a move in mind.

A design and architecture fiend, she was enthralled with the new wave of green living. "I've always believed in democratic design—we should all be able to create a beautiful house without gobs of money," says Crawford, who happens to hold an MBA from Harvard Business School. "And the idea of building a home that would maximize living efficiency and be cost-effective just made sense to me." So she and Sven Schroeter of TAO Architects conceived a space of multipurpose rooms and tossed convention out the window. "Our bedrooms are in the front of the house facing north so it's cooler for sleeping," she says. "We live in the back of the house where the sun beats in all day." Just two rooms do the trick: The dining room doubles as a family office, and the living room flows into the kitchen. "I am five paces away from my boys' bedrooms and two paces away from the fridge at all times," she says. "The house is so relaxing. It's almost a Zen feeling." Form, function and feng-shui—anyone would be filled with envy, light green or otherwise.



Living and Dining Rooms
The Crawfords chose tranquil, neutral colors and wooden accessories. Radiant flooring and an energy-efficient gas fireplace have helped reduce their heating bills by two thirds.

Kitchen
When possible, Sylvia Crawford (above) gathered recycled wood for flooring, as well as formaldehyde-free wood from locally managed forests. An energy-efficient system (renewaire.com) circulates fresh air.

Kids' Bedrooms
The boys begged for a "secret" passageway between their rooms, unveiled by sliding recycled barn doors, which Crawford found at a local lumber mill (longleaflumber.com). Antique furniture continues the "in with the old" theme.

DO YOUR PART

No green thumb? No worries. Renter or homeowner, guest or caretaker, you can easily enhance your eco ID. We asked Barbara Batshalom, executive director of the Green Round Table Inc., dedicated to sustainable design, to share her top tips.

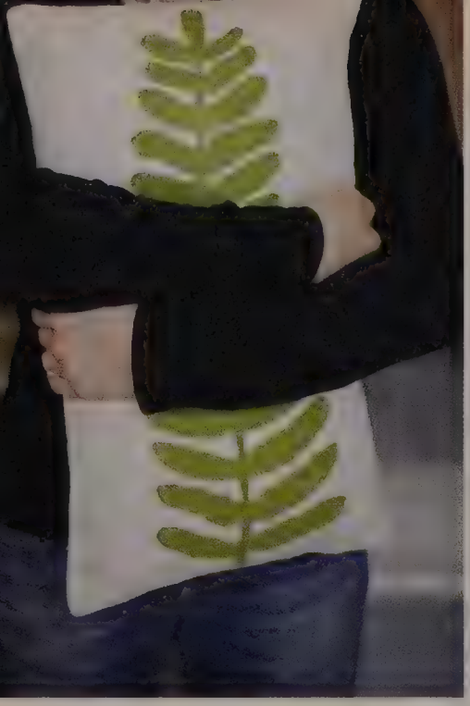
1. Out for din-din? Pick up a programmable thermostat and automate it to drop a few degrees when you're AWOL. Some publicly owned utility companies even offer rebates—almost enough to cover the unit's cost.

2. Clean your threads in cold water. Most detergents today do a keen job, no hot water required.

3. Always purchase environmentally friendly cleaners over potentially toxic commercial brands. Keep in mind that ordinary household products such as salt, lemons, baking soda, borax and white vinegar can also do the trick.

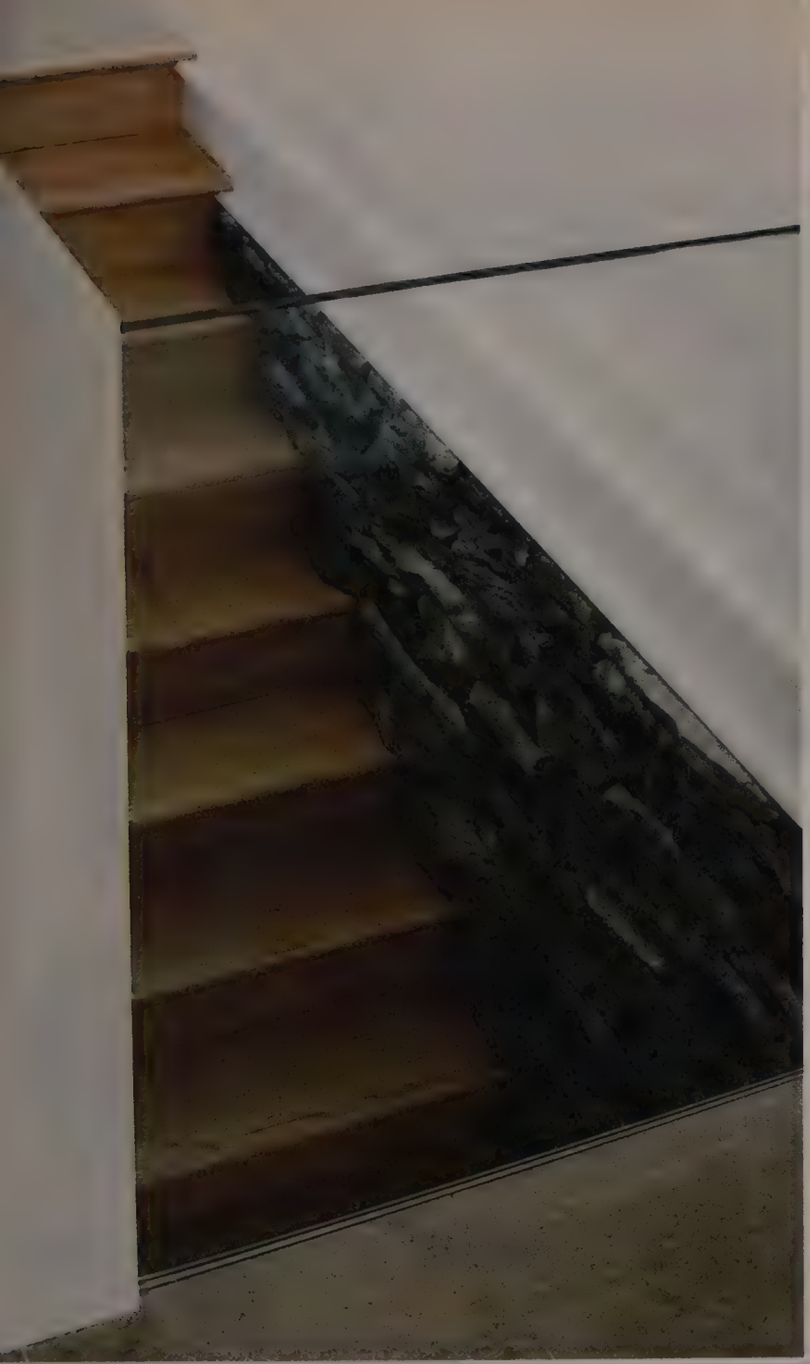
4. Insulate your hot-water pipes. Buy snap-on foam and start with the pipes closest to the hot-water heater for maximum benefits.

5. It may sound contradictory, but lose the green grass. Pesticides and herbicides used on lawns are allegedly linked to cancer clusters; also there's the excess water consumption necessary for irrigation.



Master Bedroom
The Crawfords kept less-used spaces small. "It's compact but luxurious as far as we're concerned," she says.

Master Bathroom
The paint on the walls is "low VOC" (low toxic) made from raw ingredients such as water, clay and mineral dyes.



Stone Wall Stairs
Even the stone stairway leading to the basement was chosen for its thermal mass, releasing absorbed heat into the house at night.

Exterior
They designed their home with the principles of passive solar gain in mind, including ceiling-to-floor windows. Translation: lower electrical and heating bills.

London on 10,000 Pounds a Day

BY JONATHAN SOROFF ILLUSTRATION BY RHONDA MULDER

Believe it or not, there was a time when trans-Atlantic air travel was both pleasant and civilized, when passengers wore their nattiest threads as opposed to their nastiest sweat suits and when airline personnel were super-helpful (not to mention sexy) fashion plates, instead of condescending, officious, dyspeptic trolls. Back then, jetting off to Paris or London for the weekend was the ultimate in chic, as opposed to the ultimate pain in the ass. In short, the whole thing was glamorous.

Then along came airline deregulation, skyrocketing oil prices and the ensuing decline in standards, so that air travel became increasingly unpleasant. To make matters worse, since 9/11 all the added "security measures" have made flying borderline unbearable (and if you think that taking your shoes off and not being allowed to carry bottled water on board makes you one iota safer in the sky, we have some swampland in Florida we'd like to sell you).

So is it still possible to have a romantic weekend jaunt to a European capital? After being approached by Virgin Atlantic to check out their new upper-class service between Boston and London, I decided to find out.

The airline comped me one first-class ticket, and I purchased an economy ticket for my S.O., Sam, with the understanding that he would be upgraded upon check-in. (After all, there's nothing romantic about one person flying first-class and the other in steerage, unless you're in a BDSM sort of relationship, which thankfully we're not).

A limousine picked me up at our house, and I arrived at Logan before Sam (who was at work). I checked in, explaining that the seat next to me should be reserved for him, which I was assured it would be. Virgin's new upper-class departure lounge wasn't quite ready yet, although if it boasts even a fraction of the amenities of its counterpart at Heathrow, it'll be like Ernst Stavro Blofeld's secret hideout, only with friendlier service. Instead, I settled in at the makeshift lounge, which was fine. There was ice, whiskey and a buffet of free, somewhat-palatable snacks. Sam arrived a short while later and informed me that his seat had been assigned to someone else, but we figured it would all be sorted out at the gate.

That was where we encountered our first unpleasantness, in the person of a female duty manager.

"Well, let me ask you: Did you pay for your ticket?" she demanded.

"No, and that has nothing to do with it. Your company asked me to write a story, which is the only reason I'm here."

"Well, he bought an economy ticket," she continued shrilly and at top volume, in front of all the other passengers. "We don't normally upgrade them to upper class."

"I don't care," I explained. "You're not doing me any favors. I don't need to be going to London. Your airline asked me to do this."

I sat back in my ultra-comfy chair and downed the first of many cocktails.

"Well, if that's the way you feel about it, I'll just put him back in economy," she threatened, with the sadistic glee of a ruler-wielding nun.

"You do that, and I'm not getting on this plane," I countered, and I'm 100 percent sure that the only reason she backed down is to avoid having the plane stuck at the gate for hours while they tried to locate and unload our luggage.

Once on board, the flight crew, who were uniformly helpful, friendly and gorgeous, fixed the seating situation, and the nasty taste in my mouth dissipated somewhat as I sat back in my ultra-comfy chair and downed the first of many cocktails, telling the onboard esthetician that I wouldn't mind being woken up for my in-flight massage. Sam and I ate dinner together at a table set with proper linens and china, and the food was light-years beyond the typical airline swill, while the wine list was actually quite impressive. As our seats were being converted into beds (complete with duvets and complimentary pajamas), we sat at the bar and had a nightcap. In short, the flight itself was fine, although whether or not it's worth upward of $8,000 per ticket is a matter of perspective. As Sam put it, "I feel like even the turbulence is nicer in upper class," whereas a friend who happens to number Virgin Atlantic among his clients said, "Big deal. They just liquor you up and rub your back."

Upon our arrival in London, rudeness reared its ugly head again, when the woman at the Virgin desk haughtily informed me, "You're not entitled to car service, because your ticket was free."

I felt like telling her that she was entitled to kiss my ass; instead, fuming, I hailed a London taxi. (I would later learn that a car and driver were waiting somewhere else at Heathrow.)

Shortly (and $100) thereafter, we were comfortably ensconced in a beautiful room at the Langham Hotel, with a view of the Millennium Wheel and the top of Big Ben. "Europe's original grand hotel," the Langham first opened in 1865, just off Oxford Circus at the head of Regent Street, and while it's not as well known as the Dorchester, the Connaught or the Ritz, it's certainly in the same league. Not once were we inconvenienced by the facelift it's currently undergoing, and the public rooms that have been redone are spectacular. The new bar, for example, is easily one of the most beautiful I've seen, even if the cost of a cocktail forces one to consider taking out a second mortgage.

In fact, the price of everything in London (especially if you're American) borders on the obscene: four pounds (eight bucks) for a ride on the Tube, even if you're not venturing outside of Zone 1, for example. A decidedly delicious dinner for four at Bianco Nero—a cozy but not overly chi-chi place in Kensington—seemed reasonable until I figured out that 228 pounds equals 456 bucks. While the place is certainly charming, I expect either fellatio or a good stock tip from the waiter if I'm going to shell out that kind of dough.

Amazingly, we did find one inexpensive—in fact, free—thing to do, which turned out to be the highlight of the weekend. The Wallace Collection is a house museum on Manchester Square, with more paintings by Rembrandt, Canaletto and Reynolds than I've ever seen in one place. It almost made me feel sorry for the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum, until I saw that their only notable Titian looked like a rush-job compared to "The Rape of Europa."

Our trip home went more smoothly, once I phoned the airline and demanded the car service they (once again) said I wasn't "entitled to." The private check-in area at Heathrow is far nicer than rubbing elbows with a bunch of chavs in the main terminal, and the upper-class departure lounge is a midcentury modernist's wet dream. Hot and cold running waiters bring you whatever you want, and there's a library, a poolside lounge, a games room, a café, etc., all decorated like the rumpus room of your rich, groovy aunt, circa 1968. There's even a spa, where Sam and I opted to get spray-on tans, figuring that coming home from a weekend in London in February with a fake bake was just about as funny as it gets.

If my complaints seem churlish in view of the fact that one plane ticket was free and the other deeply discounted, consider this: If I'd paid for the whole weekend at the going rate, it would have cost somewhere in the neighborhood of $20,000. So is it still possible to have a romantic weekend getaway in a European capital? Yes. But only if you're willing to pay for first-class service and be treated, at times, like a second-class citizen. ✖✖✖

ALL STAR

MICHAEL PRINCE PROVES THE SHOES MAKE THE MAN.

BY AMANDA KNORR PHOTOGRAPHS BY MICHAEL CASEY

AS CHIEF FINANCIAL OFFICER for a brand-name company, you'd expect Michael Prince to have high blood pressure and to wear a suit, tie and loafers at all times. Until you learn that Prince, 37, is CFO at North Andover–based Converse, which celebrates its hundredth anniversary this year. The standard stuffy look paired with a calculator may fly at 99 percent of workplaces, but at a business that prides itself on originality, it seems only fitting that Prince, who lives in the Back Bay, should take liberties with his wardrobe. Don't get us wrong; he's not afraid of a suit. He'll just pair it with Chuck Taylors.

How would you describe your style?

My personality is fairly laid-back and fun, with a sense of professionalism. As a result, my fashion style is more casual-chic, which is similar to my personality.

Ideal outfit for work?

My favorite work attire is a great pair of jeans with a cool T-shirt and blazer, complemented by a nice pair of dress shoes or some hip Chuck Taylors.

Ideal outfit for going out?

The great thing about my outfit for work is that it's very similar to my outfit for going out on weekends.

You make style seem fun.

People tend to overcomplicate style and worry too much about what others think. At the end of the day, your style should be all about you and whatever makes you comfortable in your own skin. If you feel comfortable and confident, others pick that up very quickly.

Must-have pieces?

I love being able to wear a great pair of cool jeans that you can dress up or down. I also have a David Yurman necklace that I stumbled across many months ago that I pretty much wear religiously.

Did you grow up wearing Converse?

I remember wearing Chucks when I was a kid all the way through college and beyond, as well as some of the legendary Converse basketball products that Larry Bird and other NBA greats wore on the court.

How many pairs of Converse do you own?

Too many pairs to count, but I always want more.

Which is your favorite?

I have a pair of black leather, high-top Chucks that have my name on the side. I only wear these shoes on very special occasions such as weddings, black ties, etc. They are always a great conversation piece wherever I go. ×××

New Hampshire: Not Just for Gun Nuts Anymore

MANSION EXPANSION

Our tax-free neighbors to the north have more to offer than scenery and disproportionate political clout. New Hampshire's Currier Museum of Art has long boasted a collection of Picassos, Monets and O'Keeffes, and now it can boast a better environment in which to view them. Celebrating the culmination of a two-year–long expansion plan, the revamped cultural space includes the airy Winter Garden, a colorful mosaic floor, bigger classrooms, a 180-seat auditorium and a new piece by artist Sol LeWitt. Not to mention that visitors can tour Zimmerman House, the only residence in New England designed by architectural guru Frank Lloyd Wright. MOLLY MCCORMICK

The Bank Job ★★½ A cheeky screenplay by Dick Clement and Ian La Frenais gets a disappointing, meat-and-potatoes treatment from journeyman director Roger Donaldson in this purportedly true tale of layabout London blokes robbing a bank's safety deposit vault, circa 1971. Little do our heroes realize that they're being played by MI5, as shifty secret agents are aiming to recover incriminating photos of Princess Margaret at a Trinidadian orgy and set up Jason Statham and his small-time crew to take the fall. It's a goofy tall tale with plenty of nifty twists and turns, but the film sticks stubbornly to standard heist-movie conventions, never quite cutting loose enough to embrace the story's more ridiculous aspects. Statham seems miscast, too hard and hairy to be playing such a hapless fall guy. You'll spend most of the time waiting for him to beat the stuffing out of somebody. Amusing but lacking personality, The Bank Job cries out for the insouciant fizz Steven Soderbergh brought to his Danny Ocean capers. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Charlie Bartlett ★½ A perplexing mashup of Rushmore, Pump up the Volume and any 1980s John Hughes flick, director John Poll's confused ode to overmedicated youth stars the charmless Anton Yelchin as a poor, little rich kid expelled from countless private academies before becoming an extremely unlikely cult hero at a ramshackle public school. At first picked on for wearing a blazer and tie, the pompous lad soon starts holding impromptu bathroom psychotherapy sessions for his troubled classmates, recklessly distributing antidepressants and indulging them in the usual "parents just don't understand" sloganeering. Things take an even stranger turn when the students revolt against security cameras installed by their clueless principal, who, unsurprisingly, turns out to be just as depressed and confused as the kids he's attempting to discipline. The great Robert Downey Jr. works his typical magic with this largely unplayable role, and we share his befuddlement that a squishy, little nonpresence like Yelchin's Bartlett could inspire a mass rebellion. Ferris Bueller, he's not. (At Harvard Square.)

Chicago 10 ★★★½ Rude, boisterous and thrilling, Brett Morgen's well-assembled documentary shouldn't be confused with any of those scolding history lessons baby boomers often produce to salute themselves as the greatest generation. Exploding notions of hippy-dippy nostalgia with a soundtrack of Rage Against the Machine, Eminem and Black Sabbath, the movie alternates between footage of the 1968 Democratic National Convention riots and animated court transcripts of the farcical trial that followed. Morgen, who previously helmed the delightful Robert Evans biography The Kid Stays in the Picture, instills the film with a modern sense of urgency. Chicago 10 avoids talking heads and traditional doc devices in favor of a headlong immersion in the events. The courtroom hijinks are highlighted by hilarious vocal performances from Nick Nolte, as a Dubya–look-alike prosecutor, and the late Roy Scheider, as the judge who preached freedom of speech while simultaneously ordering Black Panther Bobby Seale to be gagged by bailiffs. (At Coolidge Corner.)

Funny Games ★★ ½ Michael Haneke and his movie hate you, but it would be too easy to hate them back. This shot-for-shot, English-language remake of his own 1998 Austrian exercise in audience abuse attempts to shock viewers into examining our complicity in cinematic violence, mainly by making the most unpleasant picture imaginable, then scolding us for watching it. Naomi Watts and Tim Roth star as the world's unluckiest rich folks, who find their fancy vacation home invaded by Michael Pitt and Brady Corbet, two cherubic sadists in tennis whites with murder on their minds. In case you miss the incredibly simplistic point, Pitt often speaks directly into the camera and chastises you for wanting a Hollywood ending. As is usually the case with Haneke's pictures, the astonishing rigor of his craftsmanship almost makes up for the shallowness of his ideas. The movie is an expertly acted, brilliantly assembled torture device. Why it needs to exist is up for debate. (At Boston Common, Harvard Square and Waltham Embassy.)

In Bruges ★★★½ We could probably go the rest of our lives without sitting through another indie about wisecracking hitmen, but hell-raising U.K. playwright Martin McDonagh's droll, affecting feature accomplishes the impossible by breathing new life into moldy pulp-fiction tropes. Closer in spirit to Elaine May's Mikey and Nicky or the works of John Cassavetes than any recent Tarantino knockoff, In Bruges is a shaggy, discursive trip into purgatory with a couple of ratty souls that might yet be saved. The medieval Belgian city, with its canals, architectural marvels and hordes of morbidly obese American tourists, serves as a Dante-esque way station for chattery, presumably doomed anti-heroes Ray (Colin Farrell) and Ken (Brendan Gleeson). McDonagh's tossed something to offend nearly everyone into his big-screen debut, but what's surprising is that for all the drugs, fisticuffs and potty-mouthed swagger, the film is surprisingly spiritual.

NO LACK OF LUSTER

Scorsese honors his soundtrack mainstays in Shine a Light.

Shine a Light
Starring Mick Jagger, Keith Richards, Ron Wood, Charlie Watts and Martin Scorsese. Directed by Scorsese. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

IT HAPPENS EVERY GENERATION. What once seemed rebellious eventually becomes part of the establishment. This isn't a slight, just a fact of life, and it's one that Martin Scorsese seems to have grown comfortable with, judging from his exuberant, if inessential, Rolling Stones concert documentary, Shine a Light.

There's perhaps no better signifier of this pop phenomenon than the Stones. After all the drug busts, sex dramas, overdoses and even the murder at Altamont, they've stuck around long enough to become rock's elder statesmen. Listening to Sticky Fingers or Exile on Main Street, with such sinister rhythms and murmured lyrics about cunnilingus and shooting dope, it's impossible to imagine these sleazebags in their '60s, hobnobbing with politicians, shilling for mortgage companies and still touring stadiums. continued on page 62

Similar sentiments may apply to Martin Scorsese himself. Last month, Taxi Driver was revived at the Coolidge Corner Theatre. Watching the movie for the umpteenth time, I was again struck not just by the phantasmagoric, almost unholy power of the thing, but by the sheer nastiness of Scorsese's cameo. Bearded, terrifying and sputtering vile statements that can't be printed here, he's a million miles removed from that cuddly, avuncular figure we now see ribbing himself on AmEx commercials and Curb Your Enthusiasm.

Last year, this quintessential New York outsider was belatedly welcomed into Hollywood's ultimate insider clique when he finally won an Academy Award. With all his success, isn't it strangely fitting that his follow-up project be a Stones concert flick?

Of course, Mick and the boys have served as the soundtrack for Scorsese's most iconic on-screen moments. Think of "Jumpin' Jack Flash" during Robert De Niro's star-making, pants-less entrance in Mean Streets, or "Can't You Hear Me Knocking" during the slow pan across toothpick-chewing Joe Pesci in Casino. I know I'm not the only one who ran out and bought Let It Bleed the morning after seeing Goodfellas, and it goes without saying by now that "Gimme Shelter" features prominently in more than one Scorsese classic.

Why "Gimme Shelter" isn't performed in Shine a Light is beyond me, but since the Stones don't play the title track either, I doubt Scorcese had much say over their final set list.

Obscure tracks from "Exile" and "Some Girls" are the highlights that make the movie worth seeing.

The film opens with a delightful black-and-white minimovie, as he putters around backstage at New York's Beacon Theatre in the fall of 2006, where the band is putting on a benefit concert for Bill Clinton's foundation. Working himself up into a self-parodying supernova of jittery, nervous energy, Scorsese hems and haws over every last detail while the extremely funny Mick Jagger acts exactly as aloof and difficult as you always imagined he would. Presumably fictionalized, it's a brilliant two-character comedy from a couple of guys in complete command of their larger-than-life celebrity personas. They should take that show on the road.

But eventually the concert starts, and like most Stones live shows nowadays it's a mixed bag. Having enlisted an army of the world's most formidable cinematographers, including Children of Men's Emmanuel Lubezki, There Will Be Blood's Robert Elswit and even Gimme Shelter's Albert Maysles, all working under the supervision of the great Robert Richardson, Scorsese has 17 cameras trained closely on the action.

As in The Last Waltz, perhaps the most joyful concert movie ever made, Scorsese ignores the audience and zeroes in on interactions between the band members. But with the current Stones lineup, this complicates matters somewhat, as there's always a troop of sideplayers and backup singers working behind Mick, Keith, Ronnie and Charlie, but only the marquee players get any screen time. With the Rolling Stones having become too much of a glitzy Vegas act to bear the scrutiny of Scorsese's camera, you can't help wishing he made this movie 30 years ago.

"Jumpin' Jack Flash," "Satisfaction," and especially that tedious Microsoft anthem "Start Me Up" are rote at best. Even "Sympathy for the Devil" feels phoned in. Shine a Light discovers magic in the lesser-known numbers, where the boys seem to truly enjoy playing the songs they're not forced to perform every damn night.

Obscure tracks from "Exile" and "Some Girls" are the highlights that make the movie worth seeing. Guest star Buddy Guy shows up for the old Muddy Waters chestnut "Champagne and Reefer," bringing an energy you won't find in the frankly disgusting sight of Mick grinding with Christina Aguilera during "Live With Me."

"It's great to see you," Keith Richards slurs, staggering up to the mike for a heartfelt, endearingly sloppy performance of "You've Got the Silver," providing the film's unexpected emotional peak.

"Aw, hell.... It's great to see anybody."

It's a sign the end may be nearing, and although it won't give you exactly what you want, Shine a Light will leave you satisfied. ✖✖✖

There's a hefty helping of Irish Catholic angst here, with real questions of sin and redemption at stake. An unexpected delight. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Married Life ★★ An inconsistent tone sinks writer-director Ira Sachs' schizo melodrama, which stars the miscast Chris Cooper as an Eisenhower-era smoothie so fixated on his bookish mistress (Rachel McAdams, unflatteringly done up to resemble Kim Novak in Vertigo) that he plots to poison his wife, played blandly by Patricia Clarkson. There's certainly fodder for acidic satire in this adaptation of John Bingham's novel Five Roundabouts to Heaven, as Cooper's character thinks so highly of himself that he considers murder the only humane way to get rid of the missus, as depriving her of his company with a divorce would be too cruel. But the movie stumbles awkwardly between smirky self-parody and half-hearted emotional investment. Most of the performances come off as hesitant and tentative, save for a grand supporting turn from Pierce Brosnan. The former spy takes so naturally to the snappy fedoras and retro-affected turns of speech, it seems the he was born 50 years too late. He should call his friends "old chap" in all his films. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Miss Pettigrew Lives for a Day ★★★ Light as a feather but irresistible all the same, this tender screwball farce stars Frances McDormand as a stern British governess who blunders her way into serving as a "social secretary" for a ditzy American torch singer (Amy Adams) living in London on the eve of World War II. McDormand's no-nonsense Pettigrew makes a surprisingly effective maternal crisis manager, as she attempts to guide the wannabe actress away from moneyed suitors and toward a rakish and penniless piano player (Lee Pace) with true love in his eyes. Director Bharat Nalluri keeps things brisk, only occasionally erring with a bit too much door-slamming slapstick. The film works best in its quieter moments, particularly the touching connection that blossoms between the dowdy nanny and a gentlemanly lingerie designer, played quite nicely by Ciarán Hinds. Co-adapted by Full Monty screenwriter Simon Beaufoy from Winifred Watson's novel, this is the kind of movie you can take your mom to. (At Boston Common, Harvard Square and West Newton Cinema.)

The Other Boleyn Girl ★½ Too uptight to work as camp and far too silly to be taken seriously, director Justin Chadwick's unintentionally hilarious adaptation of Philippa Gregory's best-selling bodice-ripper stars Natalie Portman and Scarlett Johansson, both apparently battling to see who can give the most anachronistically unconvincing performance. The bickering sisters catfight for the affection of Eric Bana's dour, heir-obsessed Henry VIII, a feud that results in a lot of crocodile tears, beheadings and, eventually, Protestantism. But don't expect any mention of Sir Thomas More or Cardinal Wolsey in this Us Weekly version of English history. Photographed by Keiran McGuigan in bleary high-def video, The Other Boleyn Girl lacks even the simple visual pleasures of dopey costume epics by locking into claustrophobic close-ups with inexplicably obscured foregrounds. Screenwriter Peter Morgan fared far better with modern royals in his wonderful script for 2006's The Queen, a work every bit as funny and perceptive as this one is obvious and dull. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Paranoid Park ★★★ ½ Gus Van Sant is in trance mode again, and he hasn't adapted Blake Nelson's acclaimed young adult novel so much as he's fragmented it into a hypnotic drift of alienation and reverie. Paranoid Park finds a happy medium somewhere between Van Sant's recent experimental meanderings (Gerry, Last Days) and the demands of an actual movie. For starters, there's a plot. Sort of. Gabe Nevins (a non-actor recruited via MySpace) stars as Alex, a sad-eyed and troubled skateboarder who alternates between denying and dealing with his complicity in the accidental death of a security guard near a skate park. Nevins has a wonderfully blank, guarded expression, and as he wanders down endless high-school corridors to a disjunctive soundtrack blasting everything from Beethoven to Elliott Smith, he helps Van Sant capture something strange and ineffable about the roiling inner turmoil and secret shame of adolescence. (At Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Persepolis ★★★½ Buoyant and irreverent, Marjane Satrapi's best-selling coming-of-age comic book memoir springs to life as the simplicity of black-and-white line drawings trump the computer-generated marvels we've grown accustomed to. Growing up as an outspoken female in Iran sounds like the formula for a movie far less lively, but the tone boasts a sardonic wit matching that of its spitfire heroine. (No surprise then that Satrapi directed the film along with French animator Vincent Paronnaud.) Her childhood memories of the Shah's fall and the subsequent rise of Islamic fundamentalism offer a refreshing, humanistic point of view on Middle Eastern history. Young Satrapi's punk-rock attitude and black-market Iron Maiden cassettes lead to a brief exile in Vienna before she returns and, quite movingly, attempts to assimilate into a culture where she's no longer welcome. Persepolis is funny, rambling and sad, and a welcome reminder that stubborn individualism can be found where we least expect it. (At Coolidge Corner, West Newton Cinema and in the suburbs.)

Semi-Pro ★★ Will Ferrell's fourth sports spoof in less than three years finds the comedian coasting on his usual clueless white-guy shtick. As owner, coach and power forward of a floundering basketball team, Ferrell's Jackie Moon hustles, jives and even wrestles bears in an attempt to save his franchise from extinction. Fashion choices and '70s music are presented as hilarious in and of themselves, and before long, the absurdist set pieces begin to intrude on what becomes a straighter, grittier roundball flick. After Woody Harrelson shows up as a washed-up former champ looking for redemption, Ferrell's role starts to feel more like a supporting part beefed up to cater to his ego. Fouler in language and temper than Ferrell's previous outings, Semi-Pro is crowded with improv turns from Will Arnett, Andy Richter and The Bad News Bears' Jackie Earle Haley. Despite a few chuckles here and there, the sense of déjà vu is oppressive. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Snow Angels ★★ ½ Chalk it up as another awkward growing pain for gifted, young writer-director David Gordon Green, as he again tries to wrestle the dreamy vibe of his cult curios George Washington and All the Real Girls into the demands of a more conventional narrative structure. Adapting a novel by Stewart O'Nan, Green paints a delicate portrait of a working-class town where a fumbling teen (Michael Angarano) reels from the separation of his parents and the shocking fate of his former babysitter (Kate Beckinsale). Green has a gentle, humane vision that's too often at odds with the doom spiral of O'Nan's source material.

The first two thirds of Snow Angels offer lovely moments of discovery, seemingly unscripted non sequiturs and character touches that feel more genuine than most movies dare. Alas, we keep coming back to Sam Rockwell's self-destructive, born-again alcoholic and a thuddingly foreshadowed tragedy with a capital T. Tim Orr's gorgeous cinematography and fine performances all around can't cancel out this story line's inherent phoniness. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Stop-Loss ★★½ A benevolent muddle, writer-director Kimberly Pierce's long-awaited follow-up to 1999's Boys Don't Cry stars Ryan Phillippe as a decorated soldier who, upon returning home to Texas, discovers he's been back-door drafted into serving another tour in Iraq. Kudos to Pierce and company for attempting to portray the often shameful treatment of our men and women in uniform, but once Phillipe goes AWOL and hits the road with his best friend's girl (Abbie Cornish), the movie alternates awkwardly between gritty verisimilitude and tacky Hollywood plot twists. Pierce has a genuine feel for the rhythms and details of small town life and draws strong performances from Phillipe, Channing Tatum and especially Joseph Gordon-Levitt as battle-weary young grunts. But the melodramatic framework too often begs for credulity—with stock characters like Timothy Olyphant's moustache-twirling Army honcho and Josef Sommer's sinister senator undercutting the realism of the movie's better scenes. The screenplay (by Pierce and Mark Richard) feels as if it's been worked over by a committee. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

21 ★½ The local legend about the MIT students who made a fortune counting cards gets the glossy big-screen treatment. Across The Universe's simpering Jim Sturgess stars as a gullible math-whiz named Ben Campbell (Jeff Ma in real life; gee, I wonder why they changed that?) who's seduced by his slick professor (Kevin Spacey) into spending weekends bringing down the house in Sin City. Screenwriters Peter Steinfeld and Allan Loeb employ every tired cliché, and romantic comedy director Robert Luketic keeps the pace moving at such a crawl that you're always a half hour ahead of the characters. Sturgess is an empty vessel, conjuring zero chemistry with love interest Kate Bosworth. Spacey phones in his tired snide scoundrel routine, while Laurence Fishburne hams it up as a casino security expert. Shot in hi-def video, the movie often appears smeared and out of focus, neon lights blurring together like the indistinct characters. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Vantage Point ★½ What happens when you watch a crummy 24 knock-off from a bunch of different angles? It turns out to be the same stupid movie over and over again. Written by first-timer Barry Levy with all the hopped-up gusto of a freshman film, this laughably unconvincing thriller follows a presidential assassination attempt in the crowded city square of Salamanca, Spain. The gimmick here is that the movie keeps stopping, rewinding and starting all over again from different locations featuring the hammy stylings of a different B-list actor. Dennis Quaid appears grim and constipated as a jittery secret service agent, while Forest Whitaker hyperventilates as a tourist who saw too much through his video camera. Director Pete Travis' debut has nothing to say about shifting perspectives as the temporal hiccups and shifting points of view are simply expository and only serve to jerk the audience around. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

A Turn for the Worse

Not on Board And you thought your senior thesis was stressful. Polly Devlin's movie, The Daisy Chain, received such a harsh reception that Britain's National Film School barred her from graduating. The project—a documentary about boarding schools—took an unexpected turn when one person withdrew her participation. As the cameras kept rolling, the footage captured an uncomfortably close look into her subjects' lives. Criticized for overstepping ethical boundaries, the result hasn't been screened for nearly 20 years. See what all the fuss was about on April 13 at the Harvard Film Archive and share comments with Devlin after the show. Meg Duffy

Music { PAUL ROBICHEAU }

GENDER BENDER

Lez Zeppelin plays the Middle East Downstairs April 11.

IT WAS A ZEPPELIN-SIZED GOOF which drew national attention to an all-female band that translates the music of a '70s rock phenomenon.

Following December's historic Led Zeppelin reunion concert in London, rumors swirled that the rock titans would cross the pond to headline Bonnaroo in June. And that's just what the Associated Press and other media outlets reported after Bonnaroo announced that Metallica and Pearl Jam will top the festival's lineup and that Lez Zeppelin is confirmed.

"It was extraordinary," says Lez Zeppelin guitarist Steph Paynes, whose band plays the Middle East April 11. "It was sort of wishful thinking on behalf of some journalist who read 'Led' instead of 'Lez' and—even though it was way down in the press release—decided that it still meant Led Zeppelin was headlining Bonnaroo."

Paynes agrees, nonetheless, that Bonnaroo organizers were playful about it. "Those festivals never have bands like this. It's kind of a coup they actually invited us. I think it's partially because of the reputation we've created and partially because they thought, 'Hey, if we can't get Led Zeppelin, let's have some Zeppelin. It would be fun.'"

Lez Zeppelin has generated lots of fun—and a formidable reputation—in the two years since Paynes solidified the New York quartet with singer Sarah McLellan, bassist Lisa Brigantino and drummer Helen Destroy. Led Zeppelin engineer Eddie Kramer produced their 2007 debut, which nails six Zeppelin covers and two original instrumentals. And an editor from Spin magazine once declared of a Lez Zeppelin gig, "There are a few jarring moments when it will feel like the most powerful all-female band in history."

Paynes says she initially hadn't put much thought into the project beyond wanting to play Led Zeppelin songs. "I was just so in love with the music," she recalls from her Manhattan apartment, adding, "Intuitively, I knew it would be much more interesting with four women."

Not that Lez Zeppelin hasn't faced skepticism. "There's still a perception of what women can do—or what they typically do—in music, and what men do," she says, "and a band like Led Zeppelin is so powerfully male."

On the other hand, she adds, Led Zeppelin was "quite girly in all this bravado." Look no further than the '70s flair of Robert Plant's skimpy blouses, John Paul Jones' medieval puffery and Jimmy Page's dragon suit, which inspired one of Paynes' outfits. "Likewise, when women do [the music], no one expects the 'male' qualities we visit," she says. "It's a bigger beast than we conjured, like a genie out of the bottle."

While she grew up on jazz and Jimi Hendrix more than Jimmy Page, Paynes says, "Now of course, it's Jimmy all over."

On the other hand, she offers, "We don't play solos note for note all the time. I'm not going to sound exactly like Page and Sarah's never going to sound like Robert Plant. You're not in the clone business. You're like a classical musician taking a Beethoven symphony and playing it the way you play your violin."

Paynes doesn't play violin, but she does take a bow to her Les Paul, à la Page, on "Dazed and Confused," a centerpiece when they perform Led Zeppelin's first album in its entirety. Her group can still encore with favorites like "Kashmir" or "Whole Lotta Love"—both of which she just saw Led Zeppelin play at London's O2 Arena, thanks to a friend who's a vintage guitar dealer assisting Page.

"It was like ghosts," she says of that concert. "To see them play was almost an out-of-body experience." And would a Led Zeppelin tour—reportedly scuttled by Plant—make things better or worse for Lez Zeppelin? "You can make an argument either way," says Paynes, who may run into Plant at Bonnaroo, where he's performing with Alison Krauss. "I think everyone doing Zeppelin is better all around." ✖✖✖

Punk'd

Good Life Fella

Like the price of a tall coffee at Starbucks, the number of crossover artists has increased exponentially over the years. Although bands fronted by actors are a dime a dozen, these acts rarely give audiences their money's worth. (Russell Crowe? Enough said.) While some thespians barely manage to straddle the divide between acting and music, former Sopranos star Michael Imperioli and his band, La Dolce Vita, successfully bridge the gap. Best known as Tony Soprano's hapless protege Christopher Moltisanti, Imperioli will be cranking the decibels at Bill's Bar on April 11, proving that Vita's fierce punk sound is even louder than a New Jersey accent.

Anything Goes

Choose Your Own Adventure

Like scenes from a barely remembered dream, the work of Adam Frelin lacks context. Frelin uses photography and video to construct moments from stories he leaves untold. Vignettes include The Fence Thief, in which an arborist builds a ladder in the forest out of stolen fences, and Winning Men, in which a boy wallpapers his room with male celebrities. Frelin doesn't reveal his characters' motivations, so viewers are left to form their own explanations. His solo exhibit, Winners, Factions and Thieves, is on display at Samson Projects through May 3.

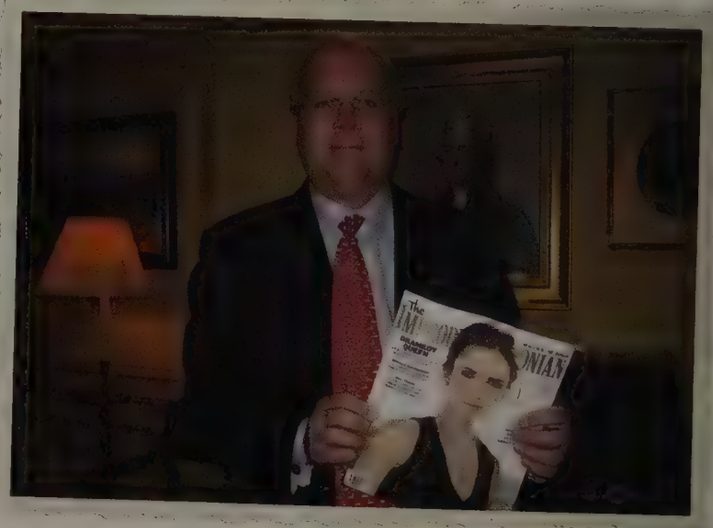
ATTENTION BOUNTY HUNTERS! BONUS POINTS TO ANYONE WHO CAN CAPTURE AN IMPROPER READER SCREAMING, "YOU SURE ABOUT THOSE FIVE MINUTES?" AT THE WORLD GRITS FESTIVAL, HELD APRIL 11–13 IN ST. GEORGE, S.C.

Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip. Where did you take us? Send us a picture of you or a buddy, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed IMPROPER Sightings.

Frank Habester, Capt. Bob Robinson, Ken Portanova, Capt. Ron Weymouth and Ed Likas went fishing in the Florida Keys. That included fishing crumbs from Captain Ron's beard.

While on their honeymoon, Colette McNulty Porter and Jim Porter visited New Zealand's Mt. Cook. It's the country's second tallest peak, after the apex of Peter Jackson's ego.

Nicholas Sarno, Jameson Hustek and Timothy Iberger chilled on the bow of a 45-foot catamaran—which we've dubbed the USS Nauseating Bathing Suit—while sailing around the British Virgin Islands.



Now that he's got some time on his hands, former deputy White House chief of staff Karl Rove kicked back with our annual Bridal issue.

Rockie Horoscope { ROCKIE GARDINER }

SHEAR MADNESS

[MARCH 20–APRIL 19]
The burst of energy you hoped would propel you far enough into the future to obliterate the aftertaste of the past should have come when the Aries sun provoked your Mars ruler last weekend. If not, be grateful. Do you really need another challenge? Isn't your present agenda full enough? Assuming the role of the hero, riding to the rescue without waiting for the cavalry looks good in theory. Instead, you could be in for fiery arguments and flagrant upstaging once Mercury and Venus enter Aries and more people get involved.

TAURUS [April 20–May 20]
Is one shocking moment worth a month of "what if?" musings? No matter what happens or how wide your eyes pop open, try to find a way to appreciate the annual Venus-Uranus meeting for what it brings: enlightenment. Maybe not the Zen variety, but a breakthrough nonetheless. Revelations continue to manifest after your value-conscious Venus ruler moves on to Aries and tests the ability of Pluto in your house of other people's money (e.g., loans) to bounce back. If it doesn't happen this week, then when Venus favors Pluto on May Day.

GEMINI [May 21–June 20]
Are they talking about you or your boss? Mom or dad? So much planetary activity at the top of your chart indicates that someone's reputation may be at risk. If it's not your family's name, then it's a person or an institution that wields some authority over you. Think. What summons did you ignore? Since your Mercury ruler moves into Aries today, you may be more willing to fight for your right to protest. By April 10, you could be geared for battle. Figure out how much it'll cost in dollars and good sense before you launch.

CANCER [June 21–July 22]
Doesn't it seem that the most complicated challenges tend to crop up in the spring? That's because while the adventurous Aries sun crosses your career midheaven, it puts pressure on your natal Cancer planets. Compounding the challenges this year, Pluto and Jupiter in your Capricorn house of partnerships are also under the Aries gun. Not only could you feel you're on trial, but your allies will as well. As tense as the situation may get this week, in another month, when the sun is in productive Taurus, you'll reap rewards.

LEO [July 23–August 22]
Keep an eye on your colleagues; a few could be feeling feistier than usual. While your sun ruler was provoking argumentative Mars last week, it increased the chance that discord will descend on your peers. You probably can't do much to fix the situation until the Aries new moon on April 5 combines solar action with lunar emotion and offers a fresh perspective that appeals to all signs concerned. Also be wary of an overly enthusiastic response when the fiery Aries sun tests optimistic Jupiter on April 10.

VIRGO [August 23–September 22]
Isn't it time you had another "Eureka!" moment? How long has it been since your last brilliant idea? Relax, the realization that is bound to change the parameters of your comfort zone shows up soon after the merger of your Mercury ruler with revolutionary Uranus. Outmoded thought patterns begin to fall away, while Mercury digs at the roots of the hold Pluto has on you. Only then will you get mad. But you won't go off half-cocked. Your rational ruling planet and take-charge Mars plot out your steps to success next week.

LIBRA [September 23–October 22]
Ask for the help of a willing partner and try to get as much accomplished as you possibly can. No matter what the project entails, the time to go all out in a joint effort couldn't be better. And should you wind up having a lot of fun along the way, well, that's one of the benefits your Venus ruler bestows while it transits through your Aries marriage house from April 2–30. But don't assume that success is guaranteed or that it'll come easily. You could meet resistance from a family member or a former ally.

SCORPIO [October 23–November 21]
Roll up the shirtsleeves and get down to work. And keep those sleeves up and get your blood tested. An infusion of planets in your Aries house of health workers and coworkers makes it hard to ignore what's going on with your body or to give short shrift to your daily maintenance routine. Now is also a propitious time to attend to your pet's well-being. Should you wind up with more bills than you anticipated, blame Pluto and Mars, your coruling planets, for dominating your financial zones.

SAGITTARIUS [November 22–December 21] The physical energy emanating from your Aries house of recreation could be the nudge you need to rouse you from a long winter's hibernation. However, stepping into the great outdoors this spring might be more of a challenge than you figured on. That's because your Jupiter ruler is currently in Capricorn, an earth sign rooted in tradition, not in footloose Sagittarius as it was last year. This placement suggests that you should be more aware of your surroundings before taking off like the racehorse you think you are.

CAPRICORN [December 22–January 20]
Like your Cancer complement, Caps are under the gun. The fiery Aries planets are exerting pressure on you to perform, especially around the house. They might even create a fight or two with family members or the irritable landlord. Although generous Jupiter in your sign can suggest you throw more money at the problem, hoping it'll go away, you're better off playing the patience card. In a couple of weeks, the tension will dissolve. While the Taurus sun doesn't guarantee sweetness and light, its earthy vibe rewards yours.

AQUARIUS [January 21–February 18]
Money matters, but not because it's tax time. In fact, that area of your solar chart is currently blank. What is chock full of planetary activity is the area that encompasses your talents and assets, your sense of values and the bucks you earn. If possible, try to avoid making any definitive purchases or decisions until the Aries new moon on April 5 introduces a fresh perspective to finances. What you could do—without it costing a penny—is get into the spirit of All Fools' Day and play with the kids, the young at heart, too.

PISCES [February 19–March 19]
Timing is everything. You can pretty much elude responsibility (for whatever escapade you took part in) if you plan your getaway to coincide with Mercury slipping out of your sign on April 2. And while there'll still be a certain amount of attention directed your way, once magnetic Venus moves into Aries on April 5, hours after the Aries new moon takes effect, you're in the clear. The only planet left in Pisces will be Uranus, the Awakener, the cosmic force urging you to be the innovative creature you are.

MKT is a seamless blend of classic & contemporary, where chef Rene Michelena's urban american cuisine is a fusion of comforting favorites and exciting new flavors. Escape from the everyday by sampling selections from the inventive drink list at the circular bar, or sink into the cozy lounge seating to savor culinary delights from the top notch tasting menu. Thursday through Saturday enjoy lounge music by Dj Tym Ryan. Mon-Fri 11 a.m.–2 a.m., Sat 5 p.m.-2 a.m. Kitchen Mon-Wed 11 a.m.-10 p.m., Thurs-Fri 11 a.m.-11 p.m., Sat 5 p.m.-11 p.m.

SANCTUARY [189 State Street, Boston 617.573.9333 www.sanctuaryboston.com] Located in the heart of the Financial District, Sanctuary's unique atmosphere and trendy clientele continue to heat up Boston's night life, maintaining its reputation as one of the most popular nighteries in Boston. Sanctuary's signature cocktails, homemade Sangria, and renowned Martinis create a draw of ever-changing crowds that continue to indulge in Boston's premier dining and lounge experience. Sanctuary serves an eclectic dinner menu ranging from Traditional Tacos to Asian-American fusion to Gourmet burgers. Sanctuary is open Evenings Tues-Sat 4 p.m. - 2 a.m.

THE AVENUE SPORTS BAR & GRILL [1249 Commonwealth Avenue, Allston, 617-782-9508. www. avenuebar.com] Located right in Allston, food and sports are the heart of The Avenue. With over 30 beers on tap and a full menu this is the ideal bar to lounge, watch the game, and relax. Come take advantage of our DirectTV, Plasmas, 25 cent wings 4-7 daily, and $1.00 drafts. This favorite sports bar can transform into a party hangout as the weekends have a resident DJ.

BRUNCH

CLERY'S [113 Dartmouth Street, Boston, 617-262-9874. www.irishconnection. com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar earned the title of the 2002-2006 Best of Boston's Best Neighborhood bar, serving more than 400 regulars. Enjoy one of the 16 draught beers either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle weather of New England turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818. www.irishconnection.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. Accented by dark bamboo woodwork and large banana fans, it's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Relax with a Blueberry Pie Martini in the warmly lit lounge or an ice cold beer on the patio. Then retire to the dining room where you can browse the eclectic Continental menu featuring a variety of items, including pan seared tuna salad, steak sirloin, shrimp tempura, Gourmet prosciutto pizza and more. Also featuring a tapas bar, perfect for sharing, w-ith tasty bites such as Fried Aubergine, Chicken & Chorizo, and Saigon Scallops. Dillon's is open seven days a week from 10:00 a.m. – 2 a.m., serving brunch on Saturday and Sunday beginning at 10:00 a.m.

ROGGIE'S [356 Chestnut Hill Avenue, Cleveland Circle, Brighton, 617-566-1880, www.roggies. com] Shake off the morning blues with Brunch at Roggie's! Brunch is served Saturday and Sunday. Live bands, open mic on Tuesdays, karaoke on Wednesday, and DJ on weekends. Breakfast is also served all day, lunch, and dinner served seven days a week.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston 617-731-8646] "Beer's not just for breakfast anymore." At the Sunset Super Sunday Brewers Brunch, try our thick-cut French toast, potato skins and eggs, eggs benny, crispy quesadillas or our All You Can Eat Brunch Taco Bar, including a free Sunday paper and your first beery mary or mimosa. Full menu also available. 112 taps, 300+microbrews.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286. www.irishconnec tion.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall-Quincy market area of Boston and is known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef and of course, Mother Sweeney's corned beef, a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself. For thirty years, The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftains, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

THE PURPLE SHAMROCK [1 Union Street, Boston, 617-227-2060. www. irishconnection. com] Located on the freedom trail across from Boston City Hall on Union Street. The Purple Shamrock is the perfect place to stop by and have a bite to eat. The fare is composed of New England specialties with burgers, sandwiches, hearty pastas, fresh seafood, tender steaks and other great favorites. After dark, The Purple Shamrock has nightly entertainment with a mix of live music, karaoke and DJ's. At The Purple Shamrock there is something for everyone.

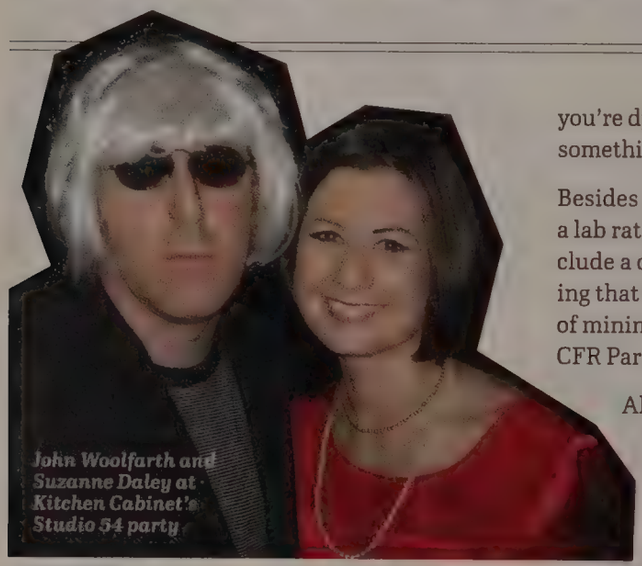
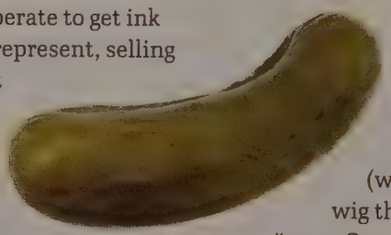
GUNS AND POSES



John Woolfarth and Suzanne Daley at Kitchen Cabinet's Studio 54 party

From the Mailbag...

Aside from invitations, a lot of kooky crap comes across my desk—from press releases with headlines like "Planning to Slaughter Your Own Dinner This Holiday Season?" to liquor samples I wouldn't poison vermin with. The world is full of PR people desperate to get ink for clients no one else would represent, selling stuff that no one in their right mind would buy. (Removable, washable, reusable toilet tattoos, anyone?)



Occasionally, however, something so bizarre and egregious comes along that it's my duty to share it with readers. Such as the Pickle Sickle—a pickle juice "popsickle" (I'm assuming they spell it that way to avoid a copyright infringement lawsuit).

Not surprisingly, this is a product of Texas (the Bad Taste State), but even the perpetrators seem to know they've done something terribly wrong. The promotional materials read, in part: "Do you wonder what we were thinking?" (Yes.), and "We use 100 percent of the whole dill pickle" (Well, OK, but why?).

On the plus side, the Pickle Sickle has no fat, less than 1 gram of sugar and "is great for hydration," because when you're dying of thirst, what you really want is something that tastes like sour seawater.

Besides samples I wouldn't experiment with on a lab rat, the makers inexplicably chose to include a copy of a letter from the USDA explaining that their product can't be called "a food of minimal nutritional value" as defined by "7 CFR Part 210.11 (a)(2) and Part 220.2 (i-l)."

All I can say is: I smell an IPO, guys. I hope you make a fortune.

Love to Love Ya, Baby...

I have a confession to make: I love the nightlife. I've got to boogie. I just can't stay up much past 11 o'clock.

That's why it was a godsend when the Greater Boston Food Bank's junior fundraising committee, the Kitchen Cabinet, threw an afterwork Studio 54–themed cocktail party at Whiskey Park.

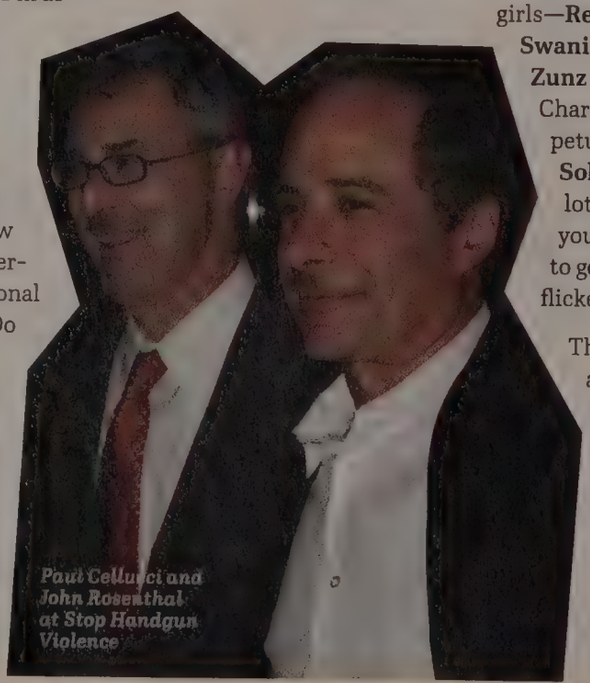
Present and accounted for: advertising guru John Woolfarth (wearing a blonde wig that he joked was "more Carol Channing than Andy Warhol"), the suspiciously tanned Peter Creighton, Wonder Woman Cheryl Richards, the Moxie girls—Regan Dillon, Jo Swani and Sophie Zunz (looking a bit like Charlie's Angels)—perpetual party monster Sohrab Zand and lots of good-looking young people trying to get laid beneath the flickering disco balls.

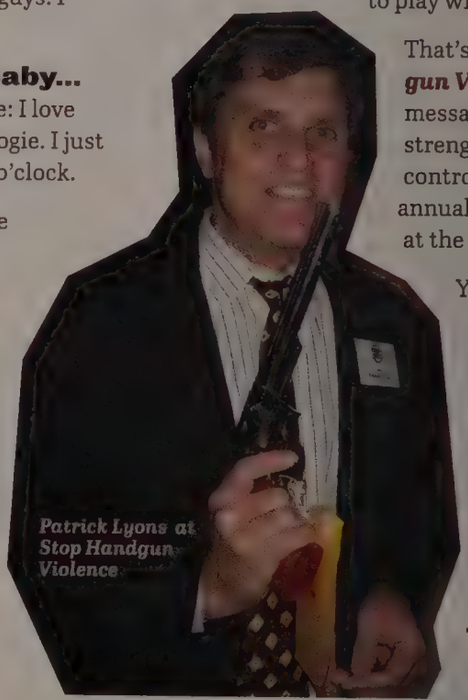


Paul Celluci and John Rosenthal at Stop Handgun Violence

This is definitely a guest list you want to be on, if only because the invitation came with a CD of dance tunes worthy of its own infomercial. In fact, the only people missing were Andy, Liza, Halston and Bianca, but who really wants dead, crazy people at their party?

The Department of Hoof in Mouth Disease...

Imagine a cocktail party where the raffle tickets are 50-caliber bullet casings, and where between the open bars and sushi stations stands a long table with a staggering array of firearms—from pistols to automatic weapons—for guests to play with.



Patrick Lyons at Stop Handgun Violence

That's how Stop Handgun Violence got its message across about strengthening our gun-control laws at its first annual fundraiser, held at the State Room.

You know you're at a party with a lot of juice when both Smoki Bacon and Dusty Rhodes are there, as were ambassador Paul Celluci, former Senate president Bob Travaglini, the organization's founder John Rosenthal, genial host Jim Apteker, nightlife capo Patrick Lyons, concert promoter Don Law, hizonnah Tom Menino (one of the evening's honorees), the stunning Stacey Lucchino, emcee and Channel 7 anchor Jonathan Hall, police commissioner Ed Davis, police flack Elaine Driscoll and others of their high-powered ilk.

Some very salient points were made about the absurdity of our gun laws, some very gorgeous crystal statuettes were handed out, and some very delicious food was passed around, while one of the guests muttered, "Good idea for a party: a roomful of alcohol and guns."

The award for most questionable taste, however, went to one bigshot who was asked to pose for a photo with a bunch of other bigshots and joked, "Are you kidding? These are the guys you'd shoot if you had a handgun." ✖✖✖

Urban Landscape

It's probably sacrilegious to talk about Terry Tempest Williams and Newbury Street in the same sentence, but stick with me for a second. Williams, one of my favorite authors, writes about "sense of place," that feeling of rootedness to a landscape, to a home. For me, that has long brought to mind Virginia mountains and oppressive heat, a porch swing and sweating glass of wine.

But something unexpected happened last fall. On my daily jog to the Charles, crossing over Newbury Street, I experienced a new sense of place, this one urban. Like Broadway is to New York and Michigan Avenue is to Chicago, Newbury is quintessential Boston. Sure, it hums with the twin engines of commerce and materialism. But it's so much more. A stroll from the manicured Public Garden to messy Mass. Ave. takes pedestrians past historic brownstones and crowded patios, hipsters and hippies, Beacon Hill moms and Berklee musicians. It's where the community converges.

This issue celebrates all things Newbury, from salons to shops to restaurants to local personalities. You'll find stories on a top hairstylist and a building that keeps changing hands. I hope it conveys a sense of place.

Dressy Bessies

TO THE NINES AND BEYOND

If there's a philosophy behind Newbury Street's Dress boutique, it would have to be Platonic. A concern for the ideal and eternal—the perfect dress, untouched by the vagaries of time and trend. That's why co-owners Martha Hilfinger and Jane Schlueter chose "the little black cocktail dress" as their flagship product.

"It's a staple in every woman's closet," Schlueter says. "Our name is a homage to that dress. Everything stems from that."

Dresses are this season's must-have item, but the success of Schlueter and Hilfinger's shop isn't based on trends. It's based on a friendship the two entrepreneurs formed in grade school when they subscribed to fashion magazines and talked couture. In adulthood, Hilfinger worked in a Boston advertising agency, while Schlueter was an assistant buyer for Talbots. Five years ago, they decided to make a change.

"We saw an opening," Schlueter says. "When we were conceiving the store, we did a lot of research in New York and Paris, and we thought about what Boston really needed." They decided locals need clothes that are meant to last.

"We look for pieces that work for different ages and body types," Schlueter says. "Dresses that are versatile. You can add layers or accessories. Make them daytime or evening. People want more out of a dress now." Labels like Vanessa Bruno and 3.1 Philip Lim are among their biggest sellers (their entire collection runs $150–$900). There's also a showcase separates, jewelry, shoes and handbags.

Classic couture with a practical bent has made the store a fixture on Boston's most stylish boulevard, garnering praise and sales receipts alike. Says Schlueter, "It's a dream come true."

ANDREW RIMAS

SOUPED UP

Will Gilson's latest tribute to the humble parsnip isn't some clever "root cellar" pun about his aptly named Cambridge gastropub. The soup's just bragging rights for a produce-savvy chef, who's seen enough gardens and kitchens to know two truths: Overwintering ramps up parsnips' pungent sweetness, and slow cooking makes them so melty-smooth that this bisque-like broth requires barely a drop of dairy. We'd slurp down the stuff even without the shaved black truffles, the fresh thyme leaves, the flawlessly fired scallop and the "wow"-eliciting tableside assembly. It's a testament to how well Gilson's garden grows.

Drink of the Moment

The Supper Club

It started with a simple request from a local bartender looking for a buzz. "Peter Cipriani would always walk in and say, 'Give me a Happy Meal,'" recalls Silvertone owner Josh Childs. That euphemism for a simple beer and a shot has evolved into something refined and, at the moment, slightly esoteric.

On the menu now as Happy Meal No. 2 and Happy Meal No. 3 ($9–$10), the pairing was co-opted and tweaked by Childs and manager Cedric Adams. By exchanging whiskey for something more urbane, these Happy Meals retain the gritty, posturing charm of a tall boy while meeting the needs of more sophisticated palates.

Adams pairs High Life with Chartreuse, the product of a 400-year-old recipe secreted away by the Carthusian monks of La Grande Chartreuse in France. For those who aren't fans (and there are more than a few), the liqueur tastes a bit like grass clippings and gasoline. It's herbal—a vague description, though when there are 130 herbs in the bottle, it's hard to be specific. Adams will try anyway: "It's got the spices, the honey, the lilac, the funky flavors going on." But the Packers fan admits that the combination of green and gold may have been another source of inspiration.

Childs couples High Life with Fernet, a dark, dense Italian digestif with a minty, mellower herbal flavor. "I'm more of a bitters guy," he explains. "Fernet isn't quite the green dragon of Chartreuse. It's become the shot of choice for bartenders and restaurant people."

Childs goes through cases of the stuff every week, as culinary stars from No. 9 Park, KO Prime and even as far out as Gargoyles show up for late-night sessions. "If you come here at one o'clock, there'll be chefs from here or there—pick a restaurant," says bartender Lexi La Guerre with a wave of her hand. Perhaps they appreciate Silvertone's attention to detail. "Most people say we have the coldest High Life in the city."

Question for Sarah Johnson

What does a handbag say about the woman who's carrying it?

Sarah Johnson is the owner and head buyer at Luna Boston, a handbag, shoe and accessory boutique.

1. Hobo
This woman often has good balance in her life. She isn't overworked or overstressed and tends to carry the same bag every day—why overcomplicate? She needs a bag that can just as easily go to work as it can out for drinks on the weekend.

2. Clutch
A woman who carries a clutch, especially for day, is showing that she's got it all together. She's organized and minimalist. She doesn't need to tote extraneous things for every possible occasion. She is cool and confident—if something does come up, she'll just take it in stride. Women who carry day clutches also tend to be a bit more fashion-forward—the clutch in hand says she is more concerned with her look than with the ease of slinging a bag over her shoulder.

3. Oversized
Someone who carries an oversized bag typically has a lot going on. She doesn't have time to head back to her condo between work and the gym, or to drop off baby stuff before running errands or heading to the office. Her bag is full of whatever it takes for her to be prepared for the many different roles that she plays in a day. It's best for this woman to have a bag that can be worn a couple of different ways—across the body or on the shoulder—so that [it] can go wherever her busy and unpredictable schedule might take her.

Sweet Valley Wine

Nothing's better this season than the vibrantly fresh, mineral-accented wines from France's lovely Loire Valley. There's such diversity of flavor along the 240-mile stretch running from the sauvignon blanc vineyards of Pouilly and Sancerre to the Atlantic Coast that virtually every style is represented—even some delicious cool-climate reds. Here are a handful of the best from my recent tastings. Just don't drink them too cold, or you'll miss the subtleties.

Michel Delhommeau, Muscadet de Sèvre et Maine sur Lies "Cuvée Harmonie" 2006 (Wollaston Wine, Quincy, $13). A long-winded name, but a bracingly crisp shellfish wine with straightforward apple and lemon flavors. This is the very definition of "bone dry." Delhommeau is a small grower who works his rocky, windswept soils to produce soft textures and ripe but edgy fruit. Enjoy with a plate of steamed mussels.

Domaine du Viking, Vouvray "Cuvée Tendre" 2004 (Wollaston Wine, Quincy, $22). Vouvray can be confusing. Is it sweet or dry? Short answer: Yes. Balanced with equal proportions of sugar, tart, zesty apple and stony peach-pit flavor accents, this wine is adaptable to a range of dishes where fruits play a role in the composition. Viking makes an impeccably balanced Vouvray that would also work nicely with mildly spicy, Asian curry preparations.

JF Merieau, Gamay de Touraine 2006 (Blanchard's, Jamaica Plain, $13). An ideal warm-weather red bursting with succulent cherry flavors, this wine can be served a bit cool. It exudes brightness and charm, with accents of green herb, toast and mocha rounding off the gentle fruit. Ideal to knock back with charcuterie and cheese, or to serve with fish stews. Merieau is one of a new breed of Touraine producers who make a broad range of varietals, but he's really skilled with this Rodney Dangerfield grape.

Bernard Baudry, Chinon "Les Granges" 2006 (Wine & Cheese Cask, Somerville, $17). Made with the "other" cabernet—the highly aromatic but underrated Franc—this red wine has a bright floral perfume and a slightly gritty, tobacco-like edge to its ripe berry fruit. It's a bit earthy and leafy in style, with intriguing spice notes. Baudry is another organic producer who's converting to biodynamics. This wine calls out for some crisp roasted chicken.

Domaine Vacheron, Sancerre 2006 (Bauer Wine, Boston, $30). The chalky, flinty vineyards of Sancerre are perfect breeding grounds for intense sauvignon blanc, and none is better than this Sancerre. Vacheron is committed to organic grape-growing techniques; his wines have a purity and silkiness that set them apart. With signature grapefruit, earth and grass aromas, and a mildly spicy, mineral finish, this Sancerre's great with grilled, herb-rubbed shrimp.

Going Out

TACO TIME

The takeout annex Olecito sits across from Olé Mexican Grill, and the vigilant chef lives in the apartment next door. "I can see the dining room from my bedroom," says Erwin Ramos, 44. "My wife doesn't like it." Ramos was born in the Philippines, but he fell in love with Mexican food in college. "I had a lot of Mexican friends, and our parents weren't around, so I became the designated cook. After a while, they said, 'You should open a place.'"

That place became Andale in Somerville; then, 10 years ago, Olé. But wanting to return to street food, Ramos embarked on a culinary quest. He traveled to Mexico and across the United States from San Diego to New York City, "to see what a Mexican restaurant really tastes like." The result is regionally influenced cuisine like the Oaxaqueña and Sonora tortas ($6.75). There are twists, as Ramos explains: "Your interpretation isn't going to be the same as the authentic. I have my influence." For instance, the standard carnitas taco ($2.75) evolves with pickled cabbage and pineapple salsa.

Ramos' new spot has as much to do with personal goals as it does with neighborhood character. "Inman Square is very eclectic, and I didn't want any chain coming in, so I had to move fast," he explains. "[In] Harvard Square, people ask, 'What happened?' The allure is gone. Well, [they] let everything in." But even at Olecito, concessions were made. The inauthentic burrito appears on the menu. Admits Ramos, "I put that [on the menu] because you guys will always want burritos."

CATCH ME IF I CON

TO THE B LINE train driver who cut me a break:

Thank you. Thank you so much for not kicking me off the T despite my apparently not-so-sly attempt at hiding the date on my expired Charlie Card behind my thumb. Of course I don't take you for an idiot. Really. I was just stressed and running late for work and was hoping that you wouldn't be the thorough and dedicated T driver that I now know you are. So even though you taught me an embarrassing lesson by calling me out on my attempted scam-job in front of all of the other passengers, I thank you. You still let me ride for free, which was pretty cool of you. Though I snuck away from you to hide in a corner seat in shame, I just wanted to let you know I was grateful for the free ride. I will never underestimate your eyesight or tenacity again.

ASK THE EXPERT

DR. CHRISTOPHER GEARY
ORTHOPEDIC SURGEON, TUFTS MEDICAL CENTER

Q: HOW MUCH DAMAGE DOES RUNNING A MARATHON DO TO YOUR BODY?

Running in general is the least orthopedically friendly activity you can do. Short and half-marathon distances are typically OK, but there's something that happens around miles 17 to 20 where everything sort of goes to hell. The short-term damage, which I know from running a few marathons myself, is that your legs don't feel right for about a month. For me, it was my quads and hamstrings. The hills in Boston are what get you. Going up is hardest mentally and on the lungs, but it's going down that's worse for your body. That's what puts most of the pressure on your quads and makes it pretty tough for runners. First-time marathoners also have a lot of stress injuries—not necessarily fractures, but stress injuries that can lead to a fracture. You also see a lot of shin splints. As for the knees, they're usually spared in the acute phase. You're not going to start complaining about arthritis unless it's already there and, short of having some bad injury, the marathon isn't going to cause arthritis for the rest of your life. But if you do it over and over there's a chance. Some people are just built better for long-distance running and can withstand more of the trauma, but most people aren't built to run long distances.

Get Smart

We've retired too many handbags as a result of makeup explosions. It's time for a breakthrough—because leaving our blush and concealer at home isn't happening. Almay, Smashbox and Too Faced are just some of the brands making the futuristic transition to colorless products. Also known as "smart makeup," they go on clear and transform to the perfect shade based on a chemical reaction with your skin. Crayola has the same concept with their Color Wonder markers for messy kids. Because, hey, accidents happen.

Multiculturalism can have a thread count. Ethnic-style scarves, which run the gamut from Balinese to African to Peruvian prints, have been popular since Balenciaga lifted them into the limelight last year. While these silken tributes to traditional dress began life at the top of the accessory food chain, they've fortunately slid down into a more accessible price range ($12.90–$75). It seems nary a neck has been seen without a wrap as Bostonians slog through the home stretch of yet another grueling winter. Virtue Finally Rewarded

THERE'S SOMETHING pleasing about following Pru Whistler—36, fired, recently dumped by her boyfriend—through the twists and turns of her rather undeserved losses and lumps in Rebecca Flowers' Nice to Come Home To. It seems unfair that her impulsive sister, Patsy, a single mother, picks up a doctor. And how come the charming coffee-shop owner, John, gets to have his wife—with whom he's separated—as a continuing option? Her friends, meanwhile, have married and had babies. Surrounded by relationships, Pru tucks herself into the colorfully chaotic slots in her sister's life, being an auntie, tactfully withdrawing when Patsy's passion and drama with the doctor take over. Haphazardly employed, she begins to work in a dress shop and discovers a surprising new niche for her talents. Flowers' witty and engaging tale is full of likeable characters, though Pru—dammit!—continues to take a back seat to other people's agendas and timetables. Singletons will inwardly cheer as one lop-sided situation after another rights itself—including Pru's.

Nice to Come Home To is the first novel by Rebecca Flowers, who lives in western Massachusetts.

Matzoh for Foodies With all due respect to the afikomen I hunted for (and gleefully claimed as my prize) at childhood Passover seders, the matzoh itself wasn't the motivating factor. Swaddled in kitchen towels, it was a cardboard-like, machine-made cracker saved only by a slather of cream cheese or the morning's matzoh brei scramble. Had I stumbled upon the crisp discs Abe Faber and Christy Timon bake annually at Clear Flour Bread, I might have paid more respect. Their version—a trio of bubbly rounds rolled as thin as parchment paper and literally flash-fired (cooked for two minutes, max) in the bakery's 12,000-pound French hearth oven—achieves more than tradition.

TEN TABLES PLUS five years equals... two restaurants? For Krista Kranyak, proprietor of Ten Tables in Jamaica Plain, the formula for success has been based on a small-scale space, lower-than-average prices and a menu that's earned a loyal following in the neighborhood and beyond. That's led Kranyak to set her sights on opening another, nearly identical restaurant as soon as possible.

Although recent plans for a twin Ten Tables in Somerville fell through—Kranyak couldn't get a wine and beer license, which would make for a very compromised sibling—she and chef/business partner David Punch continue to scope out possible venues.

"I'm trying not to mess with success," she says. "I want to stick to my vision, the exact same formula. If you keep your food affordable, people will come."

Krista Kranyak

And if you restore an old Boston institution to its former glory, people will return in droves, according to Scott Herritt, chef/owner of Grotto on Beacon Hill. Herritt, who bought Café Marliave and is currently "clearing out lots of bad decorating, like shag carpeting" and other residual 1970s decor, plans to install elegant touches like a marble bar and reopen sometime this month.

Remember Jacky Robert's big plans to put a third Petit Robert Bistro in Charlestown, complete with oyster bar and pastry shop, in the former Copia space? Unfortunately, those plans didn't pan out. But fortunately, Robert is undaunted in his ambition to open PRB #3, and right now, he's got his eye on at least one spot in Cambridge.

A few weeks ago, when actors Leonardo DiCaprio and Mark Ruffalo were in town shooting Shutter Island, the pair stopped into Grill 23. Ruffalo dined lightly on tuna tartare and shrimp cocktail, while DiCaprio feasted on a He-Man repast of wedge salad, oysters and dry-aged New York sirloin.

Dining { ERIN BYERS MURRAY WITH MICHAEL SCHLOW }

BIG FISH

O Ya plays with new flavors and super-fresh food.

Michael Schlow was trying to get me drunk.

OK, I take that back. He wants me to tell you that he was trying to get me drunk. He had plenty of thoughts on what this article should say. Actually, I realized it might make my job easier, so I happily took notes.

Wait. Maybe he did get me drunk?

No matter. We were sitting at the counter at O Ya in the Leather District, watching sushi chefs flambé slivers of fish and shape tiny mounds of warm rice. Michael is the chef and co-owner of Radius, Via Matta, Great Bay and Alta Strada, and he's opening a new spot at the MGM Grand at Foxwoods this summer. O Ya, if you haven't heard, is a pretty big deal these days. Chef/owner Tim Cushman has recently received praise from the national media for the contemporary Japanese restaurant. The night we visited, he and his wife, Nancy, a co-owner and sake sommelier, were in New York picking up Food & Wine magazine's Best New Chef award.

Despite their absence, it was evident that we were going to be well cared for in this sleek yet classic, minimalist space. Michael knew half a dozen people in the dining room and a few more in the kitchen. He shook hands with everyone; it felt like eating with a rock star.

SCHLOW DOWN The sake flows, and flows, at O Ya.

We ordered omakase, allowing the chef to prepare our meal the way he saw fit. It guaranteed us the highest-quality ingredients and a broad range of dishes, which was fine by me since the menu, at 60-plus items, is a pretty big beast to tackle. But be warned: Depending on the choices, the omakase can cost upward of $200 per person. Michael made two requests: "We want the Kumamoto oyster and lots of uni." Sea urchin, it turns out, is one of his major weaknesses.

We also asked our server to pick out a bottle of sake. "I love sake. I've started buying it for my house," Michael told her. That's when the whole drinking thing began. In Japan, it's customary to pour sake for your guest and vice versa. "It's a sign that you're paying close attention to the needs of your dining partner," he said. We filled each other's glasses with the sweet, fruity Chiku-rin Karoyaka (300 ml, $38).

And so began the slow march through what would end up being a spectacular 14-course meal. The Kumamoto oyster (market price) came first. Served on the half shell with tiny watermelon "pearls" and a pile of infinitesimally diced cucumber, it went down in one bite. "I think that dish sings," Michael said. "This food is very thought-provoking. Each bite is meant to make you stop and really pay attention."

For the first couple of nigiri dishes, Michael instructed me not to use my chopsticks. "With sashimi, you use chopsticks. With nigiri, it's the fingers," he said, picking up a sliver of hamachi covered with a spicy banana-pepper mousse ($11). There's also the one-bite rule: "If you can't eat it all in one bite, you're not eating good sushi."

Next came hamachi belly under a small pile of yuzu-and-soy-marinated sea urchin ($18), then a slice of warm eel ($10) that got a hit of citrusy Thai basil and kabayaki, a sweet sauce. The homemade la ratte potato chip with Perigord black truffle ($16) was a playful take on the salty snack. After each bite, Michael would gauge my reaction, asking what I liked or didn't like and what flavors I picked up. Between questions, he steered the conversation from upcoming projects (he's got a long list of concepts) to his family (his stepfather adopted him when he was 40) to marriage (mine, not his; though he was briefly hitched many years ago) and, of course, restaurants.

Michael's Picks

Kumamoto oyster with watermelon "pearls"

Homemade la ratte potato chip

Santa Barbara sea urchin

Foie gras nigiri with balsamic chocolate kabayaki

From the sashimi list, our favorite was the earthy Santa Barbara sea urchin ($23) with uni mousse and a kuidashi gelee, while the grilled chanterelle and shiitake mushrooms ($21) won the prize for best presentation. We agreed that the sushi chefs rely heavily (maybe a little too much so) on that torch they use to flambé, but overall, our not-so-clearheaded final conversation had us agreeing that the fish is pristine and the dishes are playful without being silly.

To wit: Our finale was the foie gras nigiri ($18), a lightly seared slice drizzled with a balsamic chocolate kabayaki and a cocoa and raisin pulp. It came with the tiniest sip of eight-year-aged sake. "Now, this?" Michael prompted. "Chocolate and foie gras? This is what I call dessert." ✖✖✖

FLIPPING WIGS

Moving into a new office can be a hairy ordeal.

I HEREBY POSIT THAT moving to a new home is the second-most annoying activity in modern human existence. In fact, I might stay in my current apartment for the rest of my life to avoid having to extract the sleep-sofa through my building's obstructed bowel of a hallway. I'm not even sure how the sofa got into our apartment in the first place, as I think I blacked out with fury and rammed it straight through walls and other obstacles like I was the Kool-Aid Man Moving Company. Moving is so little fun that I earnestly tell you I'd rather have a chlamydia test administered with a sharpened chopstick. I'd rather read all the e-mails I ostensibly get from presidential candidates. I'd rather watch Screech's sex tape. But there's one thing that's even worse than moving: helping someone else move.

There's an easy technique to steer clear of helping your friends move, and it's called lying. My problem is that I'm not a very good liar, so when my buddy Krishan calls and asks if I can help him move his business into a new office, I grit my teeth and admit that, technically, I am home and have four functioning limbs. "It'll probably take two or three hours," Krishan says. I'm wise enough in the ways of moving to know that this translates to, "It would probably take two or three hours, if we had a police escort and a military transport helicopter."

Krishan picks me up in a rented box truck. I've never rented a work truck before, but let's just say that the level of cleanliness isn't quite up to the standards set by Enterprise or Hertz or the inside of a city garbage can. Most of the interior is covered with what looks like a festive blend of melted Jolly Ranchers and throw-up, and the radio is blaring country music. I try to change it but the knob is stuck, covered as it is in the Jolly Rancher paste. Now, in addition to listening to songs about cattle, I also have finger gangrene. "Nice truck," I say. Krishan finds sarcasm profoundly annoying, so I figure I should get right into it.

At this point you may be wondering what it is, exactly, that we're moving. In this perilous economy, which industry is booming such that Krishan outgrew his Eastie basement office and requires spacious new headquarters? The answer, of course, is hair extensions. The stock market may rise and fall daily, but the demand for weaves is evidently riding an all-time high.

Some extensions are yak hair, and that stuff is heavy. Live and learn, right?

So, if there's any upside to my plight today, it's that I get to make fun of Krishan for selling hair extensions. "Where do you want this box of rat-tails?" I ask hefting some Britney Spears–ready locks. Over the ensuing hours I refer to Krishan as a "mullet hawker," "hairmonger" and "the dream weaver." But the joke's on me, really. Once I've exhausted every hair pun I can think of and threatened to Nair his entire inventory, I ask Krishan how much this truck o' hair is worth, street value. He surveys the stack of boxes, furrows his brow and replies, "Oh, probably about $250,000." Now I'm thinking that I should steal this truck, except that would require touching the steering wheel.

Fully loaded, we drive over to Krishan's new digs. Outside, I ask if he's got an automatic opener for the huge garage door. "Oh, no. That's not my office. I'm upstairs," he says, gesturing skyward to a distant set of windows barely visible amongst the clouds and jet contrails. I don't bother asking if there's an elevator, because I can guess the answer.

Now I'm faced with the quintessential mover's conundrum: take a couple boxes on each trip and hoof it up and down this stairway to heaven 100 times, or load myself to the verge of a hernia and make fewer trips? It's definitely smarter to take the former approach, which I can say with some authority since that's not what I did. Most of the containers contained human hair and weren't too heavy, but I really should've stuck to a two-box max on the yak hair. Yes, some of the lower-priced extensions are actually yak hair, and that stuff is heavy. Live and learn, right? As I trudge up the infinite stairway, past the cloud ceiling and Kubla Khan's floating pleasure palace, my arms and back searing under the weight of a thousand shorn yaks, I wonder: Why am I here? Why do people want to wear a yak attached to their heads? What's wrong with short hair, anyway? And most important, why couldn't Krishan have just gotten a job at Fidelity like a normal person?

Good questions, all of them. But not as good as the question I've got waiting for Krishan, the one that's now sitting in the bank for withdrawal at the time of my choosing: Wanna help me move? ✖✖✖

THE TRUTH ABOUT PIERCE

The Big One survives the heat as the Celtics go from good to great.

THE BOSTON CELTICS announced that a limited number of playoff tickets would be put up for sale. Did I hear that correctly?

My thoughts turned to last year: 24 freaking wins, another botched ping-pong-ball party and my favorite future All-Star, Al Jefferson, traded. Now we're concerned with a playoff rush to the ticket window.

I was wrong about the Celtics. I never could have predicted these results, even after Danny Ainge's deal-making netted us both Ray Allen and alpha dog, Kevin Garnett.

I predicted good. I didn't predict great.

Friday nights on Causeway Street have evolved into must-see TV. Sure it would be nice to go, but getting to a Celtics match has became as impossible as scoring tickets for the Sox.

It was less than a year ago that Celtics games were, for lack of a better description, a joke. The cheerleaders and Lucky, the slam-dunking leprechaun, were more entertaining than the basketball.

Sure, there were signs of promise from the kids, especially from my man Jefferson, but it was always the same old thing. Tight game, Paul Pierce throws up a prayer, Celtics lose.

The C's got as much respect as the Washington Generals. They had no place in the NBA, never mind on your average sports fan's radar.

All that has changed. The Big Three isn't Allen, Garnett and Pierce. It's the Red Sox, Patriots and Celtics.

Friday Nights have evolved into must-see TV.

But the Big One in all of this is the guy who has taken the most heat: Paul Pierce.

Pierce has been here before. In the spring of 2002, the Celtics were the surprise of the post-season, falling just short of a trip to the finals against the Lakers. Sure, they would have been swept by Shaquille and Co., but it would have been fun to relive that rivalry for at least one week.

I have to give Pierce his props. I was there when New Orleans came to town and Garnett was shooting free throws to the soundtrack of MVP cheers. But after the game Garnett put it all in perspective. He told everyone that the real MVP is Pierce.

Not sure I agree, but Garnett made a point. Pierce has been gracious with his leadership and attitude, never wavering when it comes time to dole out the credit. Pierce could have moaned and groaned—see Antoine Walker—but instead he embraced the new stars.

I admit I was skeptical of his acceptance of Garnett. I didn't think it could happen. I couldn't help but wonder if Pierce, as Garnett said, really is the MVP.

The great thing is, it doesn't matter. Awards are ultimately meaningless. Championships are won by those who don't aim for the personal accolades, and I think we may owe a debt of gratitude to Pierce, who has placed the success of the team before all else and is having his best season yet because of it.

"You've got to understand where I came from with this ball club," Pierce said in a post-game news conference. "For a team who's on pace to win as many games as we've won, I couldn't have imagined it. The whole face of Celtics Nation turned around with the trade for this guy (Garnett)."

Garnett was the catalyst for change and is the figurehead for what will be the greatest turnaround in NBA history. But Pierce is the rudder, the driving force without whom none of this would have been possible. ***

THE MARATHON, THE BRUINS, BILL BUCKNER AND DINO RADJA

5 KNEE-JERK RED SOX REACTIONS

Very Happy Returns
Bill Buckner's long-awaited homecoming: It was heartfelt. It was emotional. It was relatively entertaining. But most of all, it was really, really awkward. Yeah, it was nice to see the guy cheered at Fenway, but the dramatic walk from left field? The blaring music that sounded straight out of Last of the Mohicans? The five-minute standing ovation? Call us heartless, but who cares? Or more specifically, who cares that much?

We Ain't Scaredah No Blue Jay!
This spring has brought Red Sox Nation its next great unofficial mascot: Andre the Hawk—named after Andre Dawson, the last great hawk to roam Fenway. He burst onto the scene with a preseason attack on a 13-year-old girl, and now he's here to stay. (We approached President RemDawg about making Andre an official mascot, but all he kept saying to us was, "RemyReport.com." Over and over.)

Coming up Short... Um, Stop
If Theo Epstein has an Achilles heel, it's most definitely in his evaluation of the shortstop position. The Edgar Renteria Experiment was a mess from the start, and Julio Lugo is well on his way to proving that last season's lessons in suckitude were no fluke. So where do the Sox turn? We said it once, and we'll say it again: Activate Johnny Pesky!

On the Down Lowell
We're not getting too worked up over Mike Lowell's slow start (swear on Jacoby Ellsbury's life), but here are the numbers after 30 at-bats in 2008: One run scored, one injured thumb and zero RBI.

Don't Call Him Nancy
Don't look now (OK, you can look if you want), but JD Drew's been pretty sharp so far this year. Not only are his numbers impressive—.364 average and two home runs through 22 at-bats—but he finally seems confident at the plate and is driving the ball to all fields. Sure, there's still the occasional called third strike, but you've got to walk before you can run—and with JD, we know running usually leads to a stint on the 15-day DL.

2 MARATHON DAY TIPS

Rise and Shine...
Find your spectating spot early—whether it be a bar, the street or a house party—and stay there. In fact, if you aren't settled with drink No. 1 in your hand by 10:30 am, don't bother leaving the house. Suck it up and set your alarm, unless you get a kick out of waiting in lines or walking detours around the city.

No, no you're not...
Don't get unrealistically motivated by all the runners triumphantly crossing the finish line and start saying things like, "This is so inspiring, I'm definitely gonna do it next year!" We all know you aren't.

3 Pieces of Celtics Hardware

Dino Radja Circa 1996 Award for Team MVP It's impossible to calculate the psychological effect Kevin Garnett's had on the Celtics, but when it comes to on-court presence and contributions over an 82-game period, Paul Pierce is undoubtedly the MVP.

Ed Pinckney Award for Unsung Heroism
Leon Powe doesn't get this award because he was especially important this year (they're a 60-win team with or without him), but more because he's emerged from the depths of Acie Earl–dom to prove he'll contribute far beyond 2008. Heading into this season, we'd have guessed Powe would be overseas by next summer. But now it'd be crazy to think he won't have a career in the NBA (and hopefully in Boston).

Two Girls, One Cup* Award for Excellence in the Spirit of Canadian Doubles
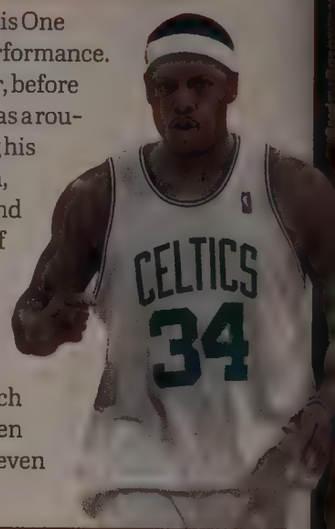
To James Posey for his One Posey, Two Cups performance. If you're not familiar, before every game, Posey has a routine of fist-pumping his way down the bench, and then grabbing and chugging two cups of Gatorade before taking his seat. Then he goes through and makes sure every light switch in the Garden has been flicked on and off an even number of times.



1 ACT OF DUTY

Let's give the Bruins some credit. Not only did Sports Illustrated predict they'd finish last in the Eastern Conference, but the B's also survived a rash of big-time injuries to make it into the playoffs. They may still be the red-headed sports team of the Hub, but aren't you supposed to love all your children equally? Or at least that's what you tell them.

4 DATES TO WATCH

4/16 The Sox travel to Yankee Stadium for the first time this season for a two-game series against the Bombers. But honestly, who cares about this series? We're already looking ahead to May 13, when the Sox finally get a shot at the powerhouse first-place Orioles.

4/19 The NBA playoffs begin, and for the first time since 2005, Boston actually cares. It would probably break about 17 copyright laws, but Comcast should offer a $50 Pay-Per-View broadcast of Gorman and Heinsohn calling the games. They deserve to be heard.

4/21 Patriots Day means the Boston Marathon starts at 9:30 am and the Red Sox take the field (against the Rangers) at 11:05 am. It also raises the question: How many Massholes out there believe Patriots Day is actually a celebration of the football team?

4/26 It's Day One of the NFL Draft, and your New England Patriots have the No. 7 pick. They'll probably trade it, but all in all this should be a pretty fun weekend to be a Pats fan, marred by only one inescapable blemish: two days' worth of Chris Berman.

"A newscast is a great reflection of life, where there's the good and the bad. It's just how the deck gets shuffled every day."

Soroff On MARIA STEPHANOS

Fox 25's super-anchor reports on Elvis, Britney and being recognized in public.

The stunning Maria Stephanos anchors Fox 25's newscasts at 5, 5:30, 10 and 11 pm. Born and raised in Groveland, 42-year-old Stephanos has a master's degree in mass communications from Emerson College. Her reporting career has included stints at WCBS, WABC and WNBC radio, as well as NPR. She came to Fox 25 in 1997 from WJAR in Providence, where she covered spot news. After beginning as a general-assignment reporter, Stephanos became a fill-in and eventually permanent anchor at Fox. She's actively involved with numerous charities, including Action for Boston Community Development, the Massachusetts chapter of the Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation, the Make-A-Wish Foundation and the American Cancer Society. She lives in Foxborough with her husband, Dale, and two children.

Jonathan Soroff: You're a Groveland girl. Tell me one thing about that town that most Massachusetts natives don't know.
Maria Stephanos: There's nothing. Let's see. We used to call it Groovyland. It has a nice cemetery. But we didn't even have a high school. We had to go to the next town over, West Newbury, because we weren't big enough.

So I hear you owe your career to Elvis Presley?
I do. When he died, my parents were so blown away and transfixed by the news coverage. I'd never seen them like that before. That's what made me want to go into television.

Why didn't you name one of your kids after him?
Ooooh! That's a great idea! I might consider a name change. I think for my daughter. It would be too obvious for my son.

Are you a busybody by nature?
I'm nosy. When I was a kid, if I was served spaghetti, it was like, "Well, how'd you make those meatballs? What goes into them? What kind of sauce did you use? Are the tomatoes from the garden?" I drove my parents crazy.

You're the saucy, sexy anchor in this market. Do you play that up?
I feel like a 42-year-old mother of two who seriously loves the news. That saucy, sexy stuff is what you said, not me.

Favorite moment with a public figure?
I once told Jane Swift to wear lipstick. She was running for governor and wasn't wearing any lipstick at all these press conferences. I didn't know her, and she certainly wasn't particularly fond of me, because I'd been covering her, but we were chatting before a one-on-one interview, just small talk. And I said, "Y'know, I've noticed this, and please don't take offense. But we're a visual medium and sometimes you don't wear enough make-up, which might make you look more tired than you are. You should put some lipstick on, and you'd really pop on the camera." She just kind of looked at me. Fast forward to when I got the anchor job. She sent me a note on the governor's stationery saying, "Congratulations, and don't forget to always wear your lipstick."

Story that scared you the most?
Well, standing on the roof of a building in Washington, D.C., right after 9/11 and seeing all the men in uniform walking around with their monstrous guns and no cars in the street or planes in the sky. It was pretty freaky.

Do you ever get depressed from delivering such downbeat news every day?
Yes. I can't deal with stories where kids are hurt or things like that, but the nature of a newscast is that it has an ebb and flow. You get really upset, but then you get to weather and then you're talking about more positive things. A newscast is a great reflection of life, where there's the good and the bad, and the bad and the good. It's just how the deck gets shuffled every day.

Favorite part of the job?
That it's absolutely different every single day. It's never, ever boring.

Least favorite?
I hate reading trash about myself in articles like this. [Laughs.]

Worst thing you ever read about yourself?
It's not appropriate, even for The Improper Bostonian.

So are the media totally out of control?
I think there's a tendency to stir the pot a little more vigorously than we used to. It's sad. We have to talk about Britney Spears and all that.

I know! It's not news.
I don't know about that. I don't think it's the lead story, but Britney Spears does deserve a place somewhere in the newscast because it's what people are talking about.

Worst outfit you ever wore on air?
[Laughs.] You have a couple of hours? Lemme tell you, when I was in Rhode Island, I didn't care what I looked like. I cared about getting the story. I had the blackest, curliest hair. I wore the same jacket all the time. I had no clue.

So is what you wear on air what you would wear normally?
Are you kidding me? I'd be in jeans and a sweater for the rest of my life. But I'm thankful for the guys at Fox. They dictate a lot, but I needed their guidance and I appreciate it.

Weird viewer encounters?
If I'm in a store and people see me, they truly believe that I'm behind that TV screen and I can't hear them. And I want to say, "I can hear you saying, 'Oh, her nose is so big.'" It's the strangest phenomenon, and it makes me crazy.

Do people expect you to know everything about everything?
Yes, and I love it. Because I try to know everything about everything. But you know what's funny? I get confused a lot for Maria Bartiromo, the CNBC Money Honey, and people ask me about financial things. I have no clue, but I'll still try to answer them.

Is there a word that you can't pronounce when you see it on the teleprompter?
There are many, but just last night, I couldn't say bat mitzvah. I've been to at least 50 of them, but I just couldn't say it last night. But I have no problem saying to the audience, "I don't know how to pronounce this."

Last question: On Sept. 7, will you lead the newscast by reporting that it's my birthday?
Do you have another job for me if I do that? I might be able to stick it in with the Britney stuff. ✖✖✖

A CUT ABOVE THE REST

Marc Harris earns his tony address.

BY AMANDA KNORR PHOTOGRAPHS BY KELLY DAVIDSON

MARC HARRIS PULLED A STYLIST aside on a recent afternoon for a midday reality check.

"What? I'm not doing a bad job," came the response.

"You're right. It isn't a bad job. But I didn't bring you here to do OK. I brought you here to be a rock star."

The employee happens to be his daughter; call it tough love. But as the owner of four namesake salons, including one on glitzy Newbury Street, 49-year-old Harris pushes for the best—and knows that only rock stars make the cut.

He certainly looks the part: tall and thin with dark tousled hair, a neatly trimmed goatee and lithe hands. The father of three credits much of his drive to the rough neighborhood where he was raised. Did he always know what he wanted to do? No. But he knew he wanted out (a dilemma he's glad his kids don't face in Milton). "I used to walk 20 feet in front of my mom to school. One day the crossing guard said, 'That boy of yours walks like he owns the street.'

"I was fiercely independent as a kid," he tells me. Which, in the housing projects of Southie during the '60s, worked to his advantage. "Growing up, I was always more or less a leader, whether it was sports or hanging on the corner. I've always pictured myself at the top of whatever I did."

His brother, Bill, agrees. "The thing about South Boston, as a young man on the street, is there's a lot of peer pressure to all dress the same. Everyone wants something similar to what the other is wearing to fit in," he says. "Marc had that, but it always had a twist. He'd be the first one to introduce it to the group, they'd all copy him, and then he'd move on to something else."

Uninspired with the school system, Harris sought life lessons on the baseball field, where he was a star lefty pitcher and captain (naturally). It wasn't until his late teens, when he accompanied Bill to John Dellaria's salon, that Harris realized hairdressing was his destiny. He'd never cut a strand of hair—ever. "I always had that artistic kind of flair, I just didn't know what it applied to," he explains. One look at the atmosphere, talent and pretty girls (he prefers brunettes), and Harris turned in his bat and glove.

The sports background makes perfect sense for a man who made his name on Newbury—a place where there are reportedly more salons per square foot than any other street in the country. "I love my competition right in my face. I'm like, 'Yeah, bring it on,' but in a healthy way," says Harris, who befriended and has the utmost respect for his neighboring rivals James Joseph and Pini Swissa. That's good, because he immediately asks where I got my highlights done (phew, he likes them). In just one glance, he knows my hair won't hold a curl and decrees bangs a no-no with such a glaring cowlick—all the advice I could've used as a teenager.

At 18, Harris and a few of his best friends enrolled in the Wilfred Academy hairdressing school; he was the only one to graduate. A year later, he scored an assistant position at John Dellaria Salon. "It was amazing. It was a real fast-paced, busy salon with an impeccable reputation. It was the salon to work at—there was no mistaking it."

"I love my competition right in my face. I'm like, 'Bring it on,' but in a healthy way."

But leave it to an older brother to paint a less glamorous picture. "He used to scrub the floors," Bill says.

"[The salon] had these brown and white tiles, and the white was kind of gray. Marc came in there with a toothbrush and bleach and John commented that he'd never seen them look so great. That's Marc's work ethic."

During this time Harris became more comfortable with his craft, thanks in large part to his esteemed coach. "[Dellaria] was the true artist throughout the region. I think even now, to this day, a lot of very well-known hairdressers consider him one of the most underrated talents of all time." Harris spent 12 years with him, traveling the country as Dellaria's primary educator and eventually a prominent representative of the company. But Harris' motivation and personal style set him apart from everyone, including his mentor—and people took notice.

Karin Stephan, a 66-year-old client, recalls her first haircut with Harris; he was 21, and Dellaria was running late. It was love at first snip. "I feel like he works not only conceptually, but from feeling," Stephan explains. "John, he's at a very high artistic level in relationship to your face. Marc has that but he takes in the personality of the person, the quirks. He individuated very quickly on." So in 1990, when he opened his first salon, Stephan followed.

Like many greats, Harris knows what sets his technique apart. "I look at myself more like a sculptor than a haircutter. I use a lot of rhythm in my work and have the ability to take all the things around me and be acutely aware of what's happening, but keep them just outside my perimeter so it doesn't affect the quality of work that I'm doing," he says.

His father taught him that "the most important thing you have in life is your reputation. Reputation, loyalty and integrity."

At work he looks like a cross between a mad scientist and an eccentric painter—same ripped jeans and brush, different canvas. In seconds, he's on his tip toes, then on one knee, twirling scissors around his fingers and getting just the right amount of product without ever averting his eyes from the client's hair. He's also completely engaged in conversation—a superhuman level of multitasking.

"When he's chatting with you he's so deft, whereas I've had haircutters who are cutting my hair and they're losing focus," Stephan says. "He just seems to be dancing around you."

For Harris, if a customer hates a new do, it means something got lost in translation. "When you're at the top of your game and the work is good enough, no one is going to sit there and say, 'I really don't like that.' When it breaks down, it's not a lack of quality; it's a lack of communication."

His father taught him that "the most important thing you have in life is your reputation. Reputation, loyalty and integrity." So Harris, who asks $150 for a cut, would refuse to touch a person's hair before doing something he disagreed with. (After all, heads are walking advertisements.) This doesn't mean you'll ask for a Gwyneth and he'll give you an Aniston. It just means that, like many artists, he's not signing his name to something subpar. If he thinks someone in the salon can better assist a customer, he'll be the first to say so.

As far as egos go, Harris has no patience for them. "I felt that from the beginning, in this industry, there's an elevated level of self-importance," he says. "[Ours] is a down-to-earth approach with a strong sense of pride as far as our execution."

Just don't expect this laid-back mentality to affect the salon's appearance. There are no cushy couches and enormous throw pillows, though three flat screens display runway shows. The 2,000-square-foot space feels modern with fabric and leather seats in the waiting area and a glass table holding products, magazines tucked underneath so as never to appear messy.

These high standards extend to every aspect of his life—especially to those he cares about. "Right now I feel bad, because I'm grinding her," Harris concedes of his daughter, whom he considers a best friend. But he knows that whether you grow up in Southie or Milton, the top is the goal. And as far as Boston's concerned, Newbury is the top. He may not own the street, but Harris has certainly left his mark. ★★★

REVERSE THE CURSE

ONE RESTAURATEUR AIMS TO SAVE A DOOMED NEWBURY STREET LOCATION.

BY ETHAN GILSDORF PHOTOGRAPHS BY ALAN GWIZDOWSKI

When asked why his new restaurant, Cafeteria Boston, will succeed while previous establishments at the same location failed, Cameron Grob doesn't mince words. "Here's what I thought was wrong with all the previous places," Grob begins, reeling off a litany of offenses: dark ambience, tiny bathrooms, "horrible" layout. "That's definitely 99 percent of the reason why this didn't work."

Cafeteria opened its doors in December at an address notorious for turnover: 279A Newbury St., at the corner of Gloucester, has been home to some six restaurants over the past two decades, according to local sources. Echo debuted in 1988. Then came the Japanese Miyako in 1991, which enjoyed a nine-year run till the nouvelle Indian Saffron took over in 2000. By 2005, Inq Bistro & Bar had appeared, then quickly retooled itself within a year as Luigi and Roscoe's. That closed, too.

But Grob, who also owns an events promotion company and I Boutique on Newbury, thinks he can reverse the curse.

"I got that a lot since we opened up," he says about rehabbing 279A. "Before we even decided to do the space and we were looking at it, people were like, 'This space is cursed.' I think any restaurant is its own person."

Grob won't look to the previous tenants for tips. Saffron failed, he says, because it dared to compete with Kashmir, just across the street—"one of the best restaurants for Indian cuisine in Boston." Luigi and Roscoe's, he says, "just didn't have a good product. They didn't have, you know, a soul. Their staff had no culture." Same thing with Inq, he adds: same staff, same ordinary food, same depressing decor. "You're walking into a dark room that's partially a basement, and it felt like a basement."

Cafeteria's concept is "Mediterranean cafe," and its revamp touts a hipper, sleeker, brighter interior design: marble bar, white walls, brown-top tables and a curious Teflon-coated cork material covering the banquettes. Grob hopes the decor will attract the "demographics we wanted," the trendy/casual/cutting-edge types who wander the streets of the Back Bay (many of them refugees displaced when the Armani Cafe closed; in fact, some of Cafeteria's staff hail from the shuttered fashionista hangout). "We really put money into this space," he says, pointing to Tom and Gisele sightings as evidence that the formula is already working.

"If people think they're going to make it because they're on Newbury Street, they're wrong."

But it's not a sure thing. Most restaurants do fail, and it's more than a stylin' design or a cultured staff that keeps the survivors open. While closure rates aren't as astronomical as the oft-quoted figure of nine out of 10, the stats are still grim. Several studies say about 25 percent go belly up during their first year, and roughly 60 percent close within the first three years.

Why they fail is a harder nut to crack. It could be lack of sufficient capital, an ill-conceived marketing strategy, poor value for dollar spent or simply bad service. Some close not due to slow business, but because owners burn out or chefs get lured away.

"Actually, you can think of [the reasons] as somewhat independent. It's like a symphony or anything which is a complex mixture of components," says Richard Fenker, author of Why Restaurants Fail. "You can have the worst food in the world and have a hot restaurant simply because you're in the right place and the demand is high."

But the perfect address doesn't guarantee success. "It's not location, location and location; it's location and concept," says Charlie Perkins of the brokerage firm Boston Restaurant Group. When asked why 279A has been dogged by bad luck, Perkins says, "It's not a cursed location. They haven't had the right concept." He mentions another high-traffic address, 1815 Mass. Ave. in Porter Square, that has seen Cottonwood Cafe, Metro, Giuseppe's and Rustic Kitchen come and go over a 20-year frame. Now it's the sports bar Tavern in the Square.

Even the most highly regarded restos with beloved concepts die. Perkins ran through the 2003 Zagat guide of the 40 most popular Boston dining spots, noting that five years later, four have kicked the dishpan: Ambrosia, Biba, Maison Robert and the Newbury Street Pho Pasteur. That's 10 percent.

At 279A, both Inq and Luigi and Roscoe's got mediocre reviews. Saffron was generally well received by local critics, but it closed, according to general manager Anish Ramdev, after the departure of Olaf Neimier, its superstar chef. "The food quality did go down," says Ramdev, who now works in real estate. Until then, business was good. "We did fairly well.... I thought that it was a good location." (Other restaurant tenants and the building owner at 279A could not be reached for comment.)

Newbury is among the city's most desirable destinations. Its mixed residential-commercial use, high foot traffic and narrow width attract pedestrians, cyclists, and slow-moving Beemers and Lexi. Even with gentrification, there's a sense of discovery for newcomers exploring the area. But the eight-block shopping

"What brings about the 'curse' is that diners, seeing too many restaurants come and go in a certain location, develop a preconceived notion."

mecca between Arlington Street and Mass. Ave. still presents challenges to potential restaurateurs.

"If people think they're going to make it because they're on Newbury Street, they're wrong," says Michele Messino of Sterling Real Estate. "Unless you go the extra mile, you're going to have the same issues as the previous guy. Now, maybe the previous guy was a lousy cook."

"Issues" include the local regulatory entity, the Back Bay Architectural Commission, which tries to keep Newbury's historical look intact, restricting the number of patio seats, whether a business can expand into a basement and the size of its signage. For a restaurant that wants its name in throbbing 10-foot neon, those regulations can fly in the face of success.

"They were telling me where I could put my logo [decals]—'No not that window,'" Grob says. "But I understand it."

Meg Mainzer-Cohen, president of the Back Bay Association, has identified a few must-have ingredients for an address to work. "Number one, window size. Number two, that there be direct and unencumbered entryways. Number three, signage," Mainzer-Cohen says. "As you go farther down Newbury Street, there can be windows that are small, entryways or yards that are indirect and small signs."

Known brands like the Gap can flourish amid the quirky architectural stimuli of staircases, basements and patios. But the nooks and crannies can be a liability for small shops and cafes. Some eateries on Newbury Street look like someone's parlor, not places to dine.

"In our heads we have a very strong prototype for what a restaurant should look like," author Fenker says. "We eliminate many restaurants on first look because they don't look like restaurants." The commission isn't about to let an entrepreneur blast apart a 19th-century townhouse to better conform to the "bistro" concept.

The other big doomsayer is rent. Newbury Street commands on average $100 and up per square foot. "[It's] what kills restaurants in the Back Bay today," says Brian Stys, vice president of hospitality group Shawmut Design and Construction. "There's New York, some streets in L.A., Palm Beach and then Newbury Street. It's among the top 5 percent in the country."

Big rent hikes in the late 1990s paved the way for chains with deep pockets to colonize Newbury and push out the little guy. Sandwich places closed in favor of high-end dining, upping the ante for eateries to outclass and out-gimmick each other, with mixed results.

"On Newbury Street they try to make pizza as an upscale food," complains Peter Szende of the BU School of Hospitality Administration. "I never felt that the level of service aims to bring you back again. You're there with your Neiman Marcus bag, and who cares if you come back again."

Of course, Grob wants repeat customers. He hopes to expand his patio for summer. He also aims to have "simple good food that can be put out there in volume." It's still a work in progress. Cafeteria got hung out to dry by two one-star reviews in the local press. "Everything they highlighted was true," Grob admits. "Our food is good but [nothing] you couldn't get elsewhere." He says menu quality and staffing have since improved and hopes critics will give Cafeteria a second chance.

As for that foreboding sense of "doomed," some experts say that yes, a location can be cursed, but not in a voodoo kind of way. "What brings about the 'curse' is that diners, seeing too many restaurants come and go in a certain location, develop a preconceived notion that each restaurant that has come and gone can't be any good," Arthur Gallego, of PR firm Gallego & Co., wrote in an e-mail. "That builds momentum for people actually avoiding the spot."

Like two chefs making the same recipe with different results, what determines restaurant success is an alchemy of factors. Yes, Cafeteria's veal Milanese and steak-and-cheese panini have to be good. "If you build a great environment but the food sucks, they're not coming back," Shawmut Design's Stys says. But intangible buzz plays just as strong a role, turning even lousy locations into destinations.

"There is a delicate balance between good product and visibility and word of mouth," Mainzer-Cohen says. "You never know who to blame."

You could blame the critics. "She tore us apart," Grob says of one reviewer. Then he turns upbeat. "It didn't affect us. Business actually picked up."

Here's hoping Grob can reverse the curse. ✖✖✖

His Reign in Spain

IT'S ALL GRECO TO ME

Each culture has a "Golden Age," a burgeoning of creative life sparked by either social change or something in the drinking water. For Spain, the glory years came during the 17th-century reign of Philip III, who fostered one of the most influential and emotionally expressive movements in the history of art. From April 20 through July 27, the MFA showcases masterpieces from this pivotal era, featuring the works of famed painters El Greco and Velázquez, whose richly detailed styles evoke the birth of naturalism. With more than 100 sculptures, paintings and other decorative arts on display, this exhibition promises to be a highlight of the season.

You Can't Stop the Beat

The whole Broadway-to-Hollywood genre is getting tired. Sure, Chicago was fun, but now it seems like every song-and-dance routine is being turned into a lackluster film. Even Hairspray—which admittedly started out as a movie—has suffered the same rough treatment with a recent remake. Lucky for us, the theatrical throwback is still very much alive, making a pit stop at the Citi Performing Arts Center April 25–27. Go see why Edna Turnblad still has all the right moves.

The Bank Job ★★½ A cheeky screenplay by Dick Clement and Ian La Frenais gets a disappointing, meat-and-potatoes treatment from journeyman director Roger Donaldson in this purportedly true tale of layabout London blokes robbing a bank's safety deposit vault, circa 1971. Little do our heroes realize that they're being played by MI5, as shifty secret agents are aiming to recover incriminating photos of Princess Margaret at a Trinidadian orgy and set up Jason Statham and his small-time crew to take the fall. It's a goofy tall tale with plenty of nifty twists and turns, but the film sticks stubbornly to standard heist-movie conventions, never quite cutting loose enough to embrace the story's more ridiculous aspects. Statham seems miscast, too hard and hairy to be playing such a hapless fall guy. You'll spend most of the time waiting for him to beat the stuffing out of somebody. Amusing but lacking personality, The Bank Job cries out for the insouciant fizz Steven Soderbergh brought to his Danny Ocean capers. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Chicago 10 ★★★½ Rude, boisterous and thrilling, Brett Morgen's well-assembled documentary shouldn't be confused with any of those scolding history lessons baby boomers often produce to salute themselves as the greatest generation. Exploding notions of hippy-dippy nostalgia with a soundtrack of Rage Against the Machine, Eminem and Black Sabbath, the movie alternates between footage of the 1968 Democratic National Convention riots and animated court transcripts of the farcical trial that followed. Morgen, who previously helmed the delightful Robert Evans biography The Kid Stays in the Picture, instills the film with a modern sense of urgency. Chicago 10 avoids talking heads and traditional doc devices in favor of a headlong immersion in the events. The courtroom hijinks are highlighted by hilarious vocal performances from Nick Nolte, as a Dubya–look-alike prosecutor, and the late Roy Scheider, as the judge who preached freedom of speech while simultaneously ordering Black Panther Bobby Seale to be gagged by bailiffs. (At Coolidge Corner.)

The Grand ★★★ Director Zak Penn's droll, loosey-goosey mockumentary follows a table of affable dimwits at a high-stakes poker competition, and he gives his cast so much room to run that it hardly matters how boring it is to watch people play cards. Woody Harrelson headlines with a sly, self-mocking turn as a broken former superstar still reeling from his 74 quickie marriages and a two-year stint in rehab. He's up against a housewife cardsharp played by Curb Your Enthusiasm's Cheryl Hines, again providing the calm center in a whirlwind of improvised shenanigans. The crowded casino also includes Dennis Farina's old-Vegas relic and a math whiz played surprisingly well by Chris Parnell. The plot is merely a pretext for meandering comic riffs, boasting noteworthy assists from Michael McKean, Gabe Kaplan and even legendary filmmaker Werner Herzog, here wearing brass knuckles while doting on his pet bunny. Seriously. (At Kendall Square.)

In Bruges ★★★½ We could probably go the rest of our lives without sitting through another indie about wisecracking hitmen, but hell-raising U.K. playwright Martin McDonagh's droll, affecting feature accomplishes the impossible by breathing new life into moldy pulp-fiction tropes. Closer in spirit to Elaine May's Mikey and Nicky or the works of John Cassavetes than any recent Tarantino knockoff, In Bruges is a shaggy, discursive trip into purgatory with a couple of ratty souls that might yet be saved. The medieval Belgian city, with its canals, architectural marvels and hordes of morbidly obese American tourists, serves as a Dante-esque way station for chattery, presumably doomed anti-heroes Ray (Colin Farrell) and Ken (Brendan Gleeson). McDonagh's tossed something to offend nearly everyone into his big-screen debut, but what's surprising is that for all the drugs, fisticuffs and potty-mouthed swagger, the film is surprisingly spiritual. There's a hefty helping of Irish Catholic angst here, with real questions of sin and redemption at stake. An unexpected delight. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Married Life ★★ An inconsistent tone sinks writer/director Ira Sachs' schizo melodrama, which stars the miscast Chris Cooper as an Eisenhower-era smoothie so fixated on his bookish mistress (Rachel McAdams, unflatteringly done up to resemble Kim Novak in Vertigo) that he plots to poison his wife, played blandly by Patricia Clarkson. There's certainly fodder for acidic satire in this adaptation of John Bingham's novel Five Roundabouts to Heaven, as Cooper's character thinks so highly of himself that he considers murder the only humane way to get rid of the missus, as depriving her of his company with a divorce would be too cruel. But the movie stumbles awkwardly between smirky self-parody and half-hearted emotional investment. Most of the performances come off as hesitant and tentative, save for a grand supporting turn from

GRIDIRON GOLDEN AGE

Clooney straps on a helmet and throwback jersey.

Leatherheads
★★½
Starring George Clooney, Renée Zellweger, John Krasinski, Jonathan Pryce, Jack Thompson and Stephen Root. Written by Duncan Brantley and Rick Reilly. Directed by Clooney. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

Melinda Sue Gordon

IN A RECENT COVER STORY, Time magazine called George Clooney "The Last Movie Star." Numbers-wise, this is a stretch. Aside from Ocean's Eleven and its disposable sequels, Clooney never makes much money at the box office.

But the handle still fits, probably because he's a throwback to an earlier, less embarrassing era of stardom. Scan any of his fawning celebrity profiles and you'll find countless references to legends past. Clooney's often compared to Cary Grant, but I always thought Clark Gable was the better call—a bit more comic and rough around the edges. He's also got Dean Martin's hard-partying, self-deprecating swagger and Warren Beatty's knack for leveraging his clout into risky, socially conscious projects. Somehow, Clooney has figured out a way to keep it old-school in a business that's always chasing the newest trends.

How else to explain Leatherheads, a defiantly retro farce overrun with affectionate nods to everything from It Happened One Night to The Keystone Kops? Who else besides Clooney could make such a thing happen? No, the movie doesn't really work, but its heart is in the right place. You'll find yourself leaning forward, rooting for scenes to come together even as they fizzle out.

Clooney stars (in addition to directing, producing and doing an unaccredited rewrite) as Dodge Connelly, an aging gridiron has-been at a time when pro football was played with few rules in muddy turnip patches. Connelly is trying to hold together the floundering Duluth Bulldogs, a ragtag team first glimpsed in an amusing opening sequence fumbling about in front of a sparse, drunken crowd and one indifferent cow.

It seems that in 1925, college football had not just all the respect, but also the stadiums, crowds and, most important, Carter "the Bullet" Rutherford (adroitly played by Newton-native John Krasinski), a lightning-fast war hero and media darling. Adorning advertisements for newfangled shaving products and ducking throngs of admirers on the way to class, Carter's exactly the draw the scheming Connelly needs to rescue his bankrupt outfit and legitimize pro football in the process.

What Connelly doesn't bank on is that success often brings compromise, and the scrappy sport he adores is about to be contaminated by big money and bigger consequences. Then, faster than you can mention Hail the Conquering Hero, cracks appear in young Rutherford's WWI legend, so the Chicago Tribune dispatches gal reporter Lexie Littleton (Renée Zellweger) to get to the bottom of the story. Really, would a movie like this feel complete without a gal reporter?

Really, would a movie like this feel complete without a gal reporter?

Of course she's charmed by the guileless Rutherford (he is Jim from The Office, after all). But it's a sure bet that her initial distaste for Connelly's roguish, dim-bulb charm will eventually melt into something sweet.

Clooney tries to ape the rat-a-tat dialogue of Howard Hawks and His Girl Friday as he bats zingers back and forth with Zellweger. The two are more than capable of firing off tongue twisters, but everything gets gummed up in the editing.

Leatherheads aspires to the spirit and tone of '30s comedy, but the scenes have been cut at a slower, more modern pace. Flip to Turner Classic Movies and prepare to be astonished at how quickly Hollywood used to take care of business. Films today are laggard in their endless exposition and scene setting. (No way would Jack Warner allow 21 to come in at 123 minutes, or Leatherheads at 114, for that matter.) There's simply too much air for lines to build up any headlong momentum.

The scenes that fizz are pulled off in single shots, especially one where Clooney and Zellweger find themselves in train-compartment bunk beds, each drawing their own privacy curtains back and forth, creating a miniature split-screen symphony in time with their dialogue. Clooney's previous directorial efforts, Good Night and Good Luck and the subversive, underrated Confessions of a Dangerous Mind, both had more faith in such long takes and visual gambits.

Leatherheads also presents a combination of ideals, as a sadder, more elegiac film pokes through the romantic-comedy hijinks. All Clooney's directorial efforts have been period pieces, but this is his first big-budget endeavor, and he's positively besotted with the lavish production design. The movie has a strange and shifting focus, often lingering on weathered Coke signs, vintage automobiles and plaintive music cues for lengthy lap-dissolve scene transitions. An apropos-of-nothing close-up on a scarred GI tenderly singing "Over There" musters a depth of feeling that is welcome but weirdly out of place.

The climactic final game feels more like a funeral, as if Clooney's unsure whether he should revive the good ol' days or simply mourn them. ✖✖✖

Pierce Brosnan. The former spy takes so naturally to the snappy fedoras and retro-affected turns of speech, it seems the he was born 50 years too late. He should call his friends "old chap" in all his films. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Miss Pettigrew Lives for a Day ★★★ Light as a feather but irresistible all the same, this tender screwball farce stars Frances McDormand as a stern British governess who blunders her way into serving as a "social secretary" for a ditzy American torch singer (Amy Adams) living in London on the eve of World War II. McDormand's no-nonsense Pettigrew makes a surprisingly effective maternal crisis manager, as she attempts to guide the wannabe actress away from moneyed suitors and toward a rakish and penniless piano player (Lee Pace) with true love in his eyes. Director Bharat Nalluri keeps things brisk, only occasionally erring with a bit too much door-slamming slapstick. The film works best in its quieter moments, particularly the touching connection that blossoms between the dowdy nanny and a gentlemanly lingerie designer, played quite nicely by Ciarán Hinds. Co-adapted by Full Monty screenwriter Simon Beaufoy from Winifred Watson's novel, this is the kind of movie you can take your mom to. (At Boston Common, Harvard Square and West Newton Cinema.)

The Other Boleyn Girl ★½ Too uptight to work as camp and far too silly to be taken seriously, director Justin Chadwick's unintentionally hilarious adaptation of Philippa Gregory's best-selling bodice-ripper stars Natalie Portman and Scarlett Johansson, both apparently battling to see who can give the most anachronistically unconvincing performance. The bickering sisters catfight for the affection of Eric Bana's dour, heir-obsessed Henry VIII, a feud that results in a lot of crocodile tears, beheadings and, eventually, Protestantism. But don't expect any mention of Sir Thomas More or Cardinal Wolsey in this Us Weekly version of English history. Photographed by Keiran McGuigan in bleary high-def video, The Other Boleyn Girl lacks even the simple visual pleasures of dopey costume epics by locking into claustrophobic close-ups with inexplicably obscured foregrounds. Screenwriter Peter Morgan fared far better with modern royals in his wonderful script for 2006's The Queen, a work every bit as funny and perceptive as this one is obvious and dull. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Persepolis ★★★½ Buoyant and irreverent, Marjane Satrapi's best-selling coming-of-age comic book memoir springs to life as the simplicity of black-and-white line drawings trump the computer-generated marvels we've grown accustomed to. Growing up as an outspoken female in Iran sounds like the formula for a movie far less lively, but the tone boasts a sardonic wit matching that of its spitfire heroine. (No surprise then that Satrapi directed the film along with French animator Vincent Paronnaud.) Her childhood memories of the Shah's fall and the subsequent rise of Islamic fundamentalism offer a refreshing, humanistic point of view on Middle Eastern history. Young Satrapi's punk-rock attitude and black-market Iron Maiden cassettes lead to a brief exile in Vienna before she returns and, quite movingly, attempts to assimilate into a culture where she's no longer welcome. Persepolis is funny, rambling and sad, and a welcome reminder that stubborn individualism can be found where we least expect it. (At Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

Shine a Light ★★★ What was once rebellious eventually becomes part of the establishment. This isn't a slight, just a simple fact of life, and it's one that Martin Scorsese seems to have grown comfortable with, judging from his exuberant, if inessential, Rolling Stones concert documentary. Having enlisted an army of the world's most formidable cinematographers, including Children of Men's Emmanuel Lubeszki, There Will Be Blood's Robert Elswit and even Gimme Shelter's Albert Maysles, Scorsese has 17 cameras trained closely on the action. Shot over two nights at New York's Beacon Theatre in the fall of 2006, the concert is a mixed bag. "Jumpin' Jack Flash," "Satisfaction" and especially that tedious Microsoft anthem, "Start Me Up," are rote at best. But Shine a Light discovers magic in lesser-known tracks from Exile on Main St. and Some Girls, often capturing intimate onstage moments as Mick and the boys seem to truly enjoy playing the numbers they aren't forced to perform every damn night. (At Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Merrick Morton

Vaya Con Dios

Hard-core Pawn Keanu Reeves and Boston native Chris Evans play angsty, badass cops in Street Kings.

Snow Angels ★★½ Chalk it up as another awkward growing pain for gifted, young writer-director David Gordon Green, as he again tries to wrestle the dreamy vibe of his cult curios George Washington and All the Real Girls into the demands of a more conventional narrative structure. Adapting a novel by Stewart O'Nan, Green paints a delicate portrait of a working-class town where a fumbling teen (Michael Angarano) reels from the separation of his parents and the shocking fate of his former babysitter (Kate Beckinsale). Green has a gentle, humane vision that's too often at odds with the doom spiral of O'Nan's source material. The first two thirds of Snow Angels offer lovely moments of discovery, seemingly unscripted non sequiturs and character touches that feel more genuine than most movies dare. Alas, we keep coming back to Sam Rockwell's self-destructive, born-again alcoholic and a thuddingly foreshadowed tragedy with a capital T. Tim Orr's gorgeous cinematography and fine performances all around can't cancel out this story line's inherent phoniness. (At Waltham Embassy.)

Stop-Loss ★★½ A benevolent muddle, writer-director Kimberly Pierce's long-awaited follow-up to 1999's Boys Don't Cry stars Ryan Phillippe as a decorated soldier who, upon returning home to Texas, discovers he's been back-door drafted into serving another tour in Iraq. Kudos to Pierce and company for attempting to portray the often shameful treatment of our men and women in uniform, but once Phillippe goes AWOL and hits the road with his best friend's girl (Abbie Cornish), the movie alternates awkwardly between gritty verisimilitude and tacky Hollywood plot twists. Pierce has a genuine feel for the rhythms and details of small-town life and draws strong performances from Phillippe, Channing Tatum and especially Joseph Gordon-Levitt as battle-weary young grunts. But the melodramatic framework too often begs for credulity—with stock characters like Timothy Olyphant's moustache-twirling Army honcho and Josef Sommer's sinister senator undercutting the realism of the movie's better scenes. The screenplay (by Pierce and Mark Richard) feels as if it's been worked over by a committee. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Street Kings ★★ With angst-ridden, alcoholic peace officers surrounded by sleaze and systematic corruption, David Ayer's slick, egregiously miscast sophomore directorial effort will be old hat to anyone who's ever stayed up tearing through a James Ellroy paperback. It'll feel even more familiar to anybody who saw Ellroy and Ayer's 2003 collaboration, Dark Blue, as Street Kings offers the exact same storyline. But where the previous picture featured Kurt Russell's career performance as a crooked cop growing a conscience, the latest spin puts Keanu Reeves in his place—hardly a fair trade. Ayer penned Training Day, helmed the unpleasant Christian Bale dud Harsh Times and obviously enjoys wallowing in knuckleheaded machismo without having anything particularly interesting or relevant to say about it. The déjà vu isn't helped by flat staging, claustrophobic compositions and numerous scenes in which everyone stands around explaining the plot when they should just be shooting each other. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

21 ★ ½ The local legend about the MIT students who made a fortune counting cards gets the glossy big-screen treatment. Across the Universe's simpering Jim Sturgess stars as a gullible math whiz named Ben Campbell (Jeff Ma in real life; gee, I wonder why they changed that?) who's seduced by his slick professor (Kevin Spacey) into spending weekends bringing down the house in Sin City. Screenwriters Peter Steinfeld and Allan Loeb employ every tired cliché, and romantic comedy director Robert Luketic keeps the pace moving at such a crawl that you're always half an hour ahead of the characters. Sturgess is an empty vessel, conjuring zero chemistry with love interest Kate Bosworth. Spacey phones in his tired snide scoundrel routine, while Laurence Fishburne hams it up as a casino security expert. Shot in hi-def video, the movie often appears smeared and out of focus, neon lights blurring together like the indistinct characters. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Vantage Point ★½ What happens when you watch a crummy 24 knock-off from a bunch of different angles? It turns out to be the same stupid movie over and over again. Written by first-timer Barry Levy with all the hopped-up gusto of a freshman film, this laughably unconvincing thriller follows a presidential assassination attempt in the crowded city square of Salamanca, Spain. The gimmick here is that the movie keeps stopping, rewinding and starting all over again from different locations featuring the hammy stylings of a different B-list actor. Dennis Quaid appears grim and constipated as a jittery secret service agent, while Forest Whitaker hyperventilates as a tourist who saw too much through his video camera. Director Pete Travis' debut has nothing to say about shifting perspectives as the temporal hiccups and shifting points of view are simply expository and only serve to jerk the audience around. (At Chestnut Hill and in the suburbs.)

Where in the World Is Osama Bin Laden? ★ In what is easily the worst film released so far this year, master-of-the-obvious Morgan Spurlock reacts to his wife's pregnancy the way any sensible man would—by wandering around the Middle East trying to find Osama Bin Laden. This self-promoting huckster who, in his inexplicable 2004 hit Super Size Me, was shocked to learn that stuffing your face with McDonald's three meals a day until you vomit is detrimental to your health, here discovers that not every Arab is a terrorist. Some of them even have families and jobs, just like you and me! The level of condescension on display is staggering, as the filmmaker clearly assumes his audience is brain-damaged and thus delivers insufferable, earnest homilies into the lens at numbingly regular intervals. He then cuts to goofy video-game graphics of himself fighting Osama and laughs loudly at his own jokes. Structureless, witless and devoid of anything remotely resembling journalism, this is narcissism run amok. (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

No Faux Phobias

Fear Factor There's nothing funny about phobias. People live in fear of such things as trees (dendrophobia), the number eight (octophobia) and even mothers-in-law (pentheraphobia). Psychoanalyst Catherine Kimble will discuss these aversions and more at the Coolidge Corner Theatre on April 21. Just for coming, attendees will be treated to Alfred Hitchcock's 1958 thriller Vertigo, about a San Francisco detective with a touchy case. For some reason, Hitch always makes us feel a little more normal.

Mike Miccoli

- What Happened to Pluto? Explore the debate over whether Pluto is really a ninth planet in our solar system. Ongoing.

IMAX

- The Alps. A climber attempts to scale the most dangerous mountain in the Alps. Through August.
- Grand Canyon: River at Risk. Join environmentalists and explorers as they raft down one of America's largest natural wonders.
- Mummies: Secrets of the Pharaohs. Researchers examine archaeological clues hoping to solve some of Egypt's oldest mysteries. Through May.

3-D Digital Cinema

- Bugs! A live-action nature film starring a praying mantis and a butterfly.
- Fly Me to the Moon. A team of flies sneaks aboard Apollo 11 for a lunar mission.
- 3-D Sun. Join NASA's STEREO satellites on a mission to document and study Earth's closest star.
- The World of Sharks. Come face-to-face with the ocean's greatest and often-misunderstood predator, as filmed by Jean-Michel Cousteau.

HYBRID GROOVE

Lionel Loueke infuses jazz with cross-cultural ingenuity.

Lionel Loueke plays the Regattabar May 8.

Jimmy Katz

AFRICAN-BORN GUITAR VIRTUOSO Lionel Loueke has become one of the most acclaimed new voices in jazz. Loueke's bringing his trio to the Regattabar May 8 in the wake of rave reviews for his major-label debut, Karibu, which rides the subtle complexities of his finger-picking. And he's due back Aug. 10 to play the JVC Newport Jazz Festival with both his trio and pianist Herbie Hancock's band. Loueke appeared on Hancock's Grammy-winning River: The Joni Letters.

But the 34-year-old guitarist learned how to improvise long before he tackled jazz. Not only was jazz hard to find in the small West African country of Benin, but music stores were nonexistent. You could get a guitar from Nigeria, but you'd be hard-pressed to find a replacement set of strings.

"When you don't have it, you have to think differently," says Loueke, who would soak his old guitar strings in vinegar. "They'd come back to life and sound better, at least for two or three days. Then they'd break anyway."

So he would replace broken strings with bicycle brake cables. "The only thing was, the tension was too hard for the instrument," Loueke says. "It's not made for that." When his father locked the guitar in a closet to refocus his son on school, Loueke says, the neck cracked.

Not that Loueke was deterred from his path. His knack for improvising through situations paid off at one Ivory Coast club. "I'd been there many times and they wouldn't let me play," says Loueke, so he snuck onstage between sets one night and commandeered a guitar. "I was so desperate and didn't have any money. I had to do something." He impressed the club's manager enough to earn himself a long-term gig.

Loueke didn't discover jazz until a friend of his brother's arrived from Paris with a copy of George Benson's Weekend in L.A. "I couldn't believe it," he says. "I had no idea what he was doing and no knowledge to understand, but I fell in love." Loueke put a cheap cassette machine against the speaker to record the Benson album and to transcribe it by ear. "I would put half-dead batteries in the cassette player to slow it down and be able to play back the notes."

He eventually pursued formal jazz studies, first in Paris, then in Boston, coming to Berklee on a scholarship in 1999. At Berklee, Loueke also met his trio mates, Swiss-Italian bassist Massimo Biolcati and Hungarian drummer Ferenc Nemeth. "They had their own influences from their own countries," he says. "The way we'd play standards was different."

Now, on Karibu (named after a Swahili word for "welcome"), they're playing standards and originals alongside mentors Hancock and sax great Wayne Shorter. Shorter's sharp, sweet soprano tones grace John Coltrane's "Naima"; Hancock fuels "Seven Teens" with a volcanic solo; and both masters help push the envelope in the 10-minute, abstract "Light Dark."

"When I wrote the tune, I had them in mind," says Loueke, who solely anchors the melody. "I wanted to make it like a collective improvisation."

Nonetheless, the most captivating element of Karibu isn't the guests, but the odd-metered, intuitive interplay of the core trio—and Loueke's unique sound. He reconfigured his tunings to create piano-like voicings (or thumb piano when he slips a paper strip between the strings) and blends deft harmonic work with thumb-muted notes on his electric nylon-string, airy scat-singing and clicking mouth percussion.

While the style is distinctly jazz, it's filtered through both African and Brazilian influences. Loueke draws the comparison between jazz players and griots, the age-old musical poets from the West African country of Mali, who improvise words and melodies. "I see myself as a jazz musician," he says, "but with a different touch on top."

The resulting music proves bold yet accessible. "It's challenging to make it sound simple when you're playing something complex," Loueke says, noting, "It has to be natural for the listener. The most important thing for me is the feel, the groove." ✖✖✖

The Party Band to End All Party Bands

Rock Lobstah You won't need your jukebox money tonight. Bring out the shoulder pads and teasing combs in honor of the B-52s, who'll be playing the love shack known as the Paradise Rock Club on April 23. Kate Pierson, Fred Schneider, Keith Strickland and Cindy Wilson's new wave music isn't exactly new anymore, but it'll always be totally rad. And the skinny jean came back, so who knows? Amy Gromek

Model Behavior

Girl Power

In Super Models, Betsyann Duval honors the iconic women who have shaped 21st-century female identity, and done so without flashing their privates to the paparrazi. Large-scale drawings of figures like Hillary Clinton are meant to foil today's scantily clad celebutantes. For a reality check, or to purge Us Weekly from your brain, head to the Bromfield Art Gallery through April 26. Leah Mennies

Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip. Where did you take us? Send us a picture of you or a buddy, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed IMPROPER Sightings.

Celine and Ken Oringer and Pam Small and her husband, Steve DiFillipo, took a trip through Israel. It was so much fun, Steve DiFillipped out.

Mayor Bill Gluba of Davenport, Iowa, always matches his outfit to the latest IMPROPER cover, which might pose a problem if we ever do a swimsuit issue.

Richard and Paula Kooh and Barbara and Bob Levine partied with a merry band of musicians in Tanzania. We hope they didn't come down with a merry case of Tanzania's Revenge.

Benjamin and Kirsten Watson checked out the pyramids of Giza, Egypt. It reminded Benjamin of the trio of golden pyramids his teammate Tom Brady sometimes wears on his right hand.

GRABBING THE HORNS

[APRIL 20–MAY 20]
A surge in self-esteem begins with Mercury's entrance into Taurus on April 17 and the realization that you're a lot smarter than people give you credit for. While you might not have predicted the ebb and flow of global markets, you seem to have a handle on how to use other people's money (loans) and tax write-offs. Look for more insights into where and with whom you want to spend your birthday during the Scorpio full moon the weekend of April 19. That's the time deeply buried desires tend to surface.

GEMINI [May 21–June 20]
Not only is more happening than meets the eye, there's more activity going on that depends on your well-connected Mercury ruler than there's been in a while. You're likely to be extremely busy while the Messenger speeds through Aries and most of Taurus before this month ends. But don't think this frantic pace means that you'll do a half-assed job or jump from pillar to post, person to person. Cultivate the inspiration (and information) you receive during the sun-Mercury merger on April 16 with care, so you can maximize long-range results.

CANCER [June 21–July 22]
Is that a chip on your shoulder? Assertive Mars crossing in and out of your sign for the past six months may have given the Crab a bigger set of balls and a harder shell than we're used to seeing. Have you been lifting weights as well? You'll get to watch your independent attitude play out over the next two weeks, because the god of war forms an alliance with innovative Uranus in time for Earth Day. Then Mars manages to provoke Venus, the goddess figure who's keeping the peace at work. Where is the love, the romance, the apology?

LEO [July 23–August 22]
Expect more constructive results than you figured you'd achieve in this short a time. Congratulations for integrating the imagination and divine inspiration a partner brings to the table with uncommon common sense and consistency. This is the first spring in a while that your sun ruler is forming beneficial trines to Saturn and Pluto, the planets responsible for governmental rules and regulations and the powerful people who make and break them. For the next four weeks, these agents and agencies shouldn't present any problems.

VIRGO [August 23–September 22]
You might feel you're going too far out on a limb as expansive and educated Jupiter tests your Mercury ruler by broadening your expectations. But as the month ends, you're more likely to land in the lap of luxury than flat on your ass. There's a lot of cautious advice being offered right now, so if you need to wrap yourself in a security blanket for a while, you should probably heed it. However, the payoff for playing it safe isn't due to show up until your birthday, and for most antsy Virgos, that's too long to wait.

LIBRA [September 23–October 22]
Until solar Aries ends on April 19, your partner's activities could be the energy lighting up your life. Not that your interest is due to expire on that date, but the main focus could easily shift to what this person, or the relationship you've forged, can do for you personally. As long as your amenable Venus ruler is still in your Aries marriage house—i.e., until April 30—why not use its position (and the social benefits the goddess bestows) to attract whatever is currently near and dear to your own heart?

SCORPIO [October 23–November 21]
Anticipate receiving affirmation as newsworthy Mercury, followed by the creative sun, favors your Pluto coruler's efforts at fixing a financial matter. This show of support from the cosmos can also improve your standing with your employer, a parent or a familiar pack of critics-at-large. Simultaneously, your impulsive Mars coruler is urging you to decide ASAP where you should spend your next vacation, as well as how you should get there. Isn't it time for a new set of wheels? A mountain bike for touring or a hybrid for the road?

SAGITTARIUS [November 22–December 21]
Your participation in the daily grind could be dulling the healthy glow the Archer likes to exude, but there are rewards in store for toeing that line. Nonetheless, there's also a fine line between fulfilling your obligations and feeling put upon. Pressure is mounting for a major confrontation in another week between pushy Mars in Cancer and your generous Jupiter ruler, fairly content in your Capricorn money house. Knowing that soon you could be under the gun, start now to protect your position. Court an ally.

CAPRICORN [December 22–January 20]
December Goats get the good news this week and get to enjoy the results of your good work next week. Celebrate with the extended family by spending some of those bucks. For those born in January, take note: Opposition to your recent generosity is mounting. It makes no difference if it originates with your spouse or your business partner; you'd best be prepared to defend those well-meaning intentions of yours. You could also try a bribe—e.g., a much-desired item for the house or the office, anything to keep the peace.

AQUARIUS [January 21–February 18]
Be patient. In one way or another, what you need to know will filter down to you—maybe through a link someone e-mails, maybe while overhearing a conversation you shouldn't, maybe via Oprah, the Aquarius fairy godmother of us all. Also get ready for Earth Day, which conveniently coincides with a favorable trine to your erotic Uranus ruler from horny Mars. However, for this hookup to succeed in accordance with both parties' desires, words shouldn't be necessary. You can pretty much size each other up by a look and a vibe.

PISCES [February 19–March 19]
Sensitive Fish can thank their partner or a coworker for knowing when to criticize and when to shut up. Does "discretion is the better of valor" ring a bell? However, if someone's bravery is in question next week, be prepared to watch a loved one confront a colleague, a casual acquaintance or perhaps an entire organization. No matter who wins that argument, you'll come out okay knowing you're protected on all sides. You might even make some money when the Taurus sun finds favor with powerful Pluto at the top of your chart.

ARIES [March 20–April 19]
Too many choices? That would be the price you're paying for having magnetic Venus in your sign, attracting a range of people and their flattering propositions. If you're feeling overwhelmed by these options, take a minute on April 16, when the Aries sun and well-informed Mercury convene, to pay attention to the messages you're receiving. They should help you eliminate the least feasible or financially viable. However, the conflict between your career and a romance or feeling content at home could last through April 23.

ON OSCARS AND TONYS

Tom Hooper, David McCullough and Tom Hanks at the John Adams screening

The Miniseries Is Here! The Miniseries Is Here!

HBO kindly invited me (and what seemed like a thousand other people) to a screening of its new miniseries, John Adams, based on David McCullough's Pulitzer Prize–winning book. Tom Hanks, the executive producer, was going to be there, and on my way to the Boston Public Library, I fantasized about the clever repartee I'd have with the two-time Oscar winner.

Of course, that never happened. I only got a glimpse of him from across a sea of TV cameras and news photographers, before heading upstairs to a reception that none other than nightlife jefe Patrick Lyons called "the best party this year, because it's not the usual suspects or all the same old freeloaders."

He was right. Mingling on the second floor was an eclectic crew that included his wife, Kristina, Cambridge art collector Susan Paine, library stalwarts Vivian and Lionel Spiro, petite dynamo Dola Stemberg, Kiss 108 morning mouth Matt Segal and his unambiguously metrosexual sidekick Billy Costa, political lion and Latin scholar Billy Bulger, WGBH-TV Channel 2 hottie Jared Bowen, and what seemed like several hundred members of McCullough's very fecund family.

Hanks introduced the screening with witty remarks, and everyone sat transfixed watching the first episode in the seven-part series.

"I'm glad I saw this, because I never read the book," said one guest afterward, to which his friend replied, "It's a good thing, too. Your lips would've gotten too tired."

If You're Thinkin' You're Too Cool to Boogie...

Certain stars suck all the oxygen out of the room, while others are a breath of fresh air. Chita Rivera is definitely one of the latter.

The sizzling Puerto Rican Broadway legend and two-time Tony Award winner was the honoree when Boston Youth Moves—a dance education program—hosted its Swellegance gala at the Sheraton.

On hand to help fete her was a comparably sparkly star, Bebe Neuwirth (who won a Tony Award for playing Velma—a role Rivera originated—in the 1996 Broadway revival of Chicago), along with such prominent locals as Harpoon brewer Rich Doyle and his wife, Kate, brunette bombshell Carolyn Campanelli, the delightful Karen Mize, incorrigible scamp Adam Caper and his lovely other half, Rebecca Yang, proud parent Betsey Arledge (daughter of TV tycoon Roon), guest emcee JC Monahan of WCVB-TV Channel 5, cochair Karen Fisher and the one Bostonian as theatrical as any Broadway star, kabuki socialite Marilyn Riseman.

The organization's students performed throughout the evening, while the video tributes and retrospective of Rivera's career were like a brief history of the American theater. As Monahan joked: "An incredible legacy that continues to this day... and incredible legs that continue to this day."

However, Rivera had the last word, thanking everyone graciously, accepting her award and saying, "Now I think everybody should just get off their butts and dance."

Busman's Holiday... DUN DUN!

The sound that opens every scene on Law & Order was undoubtedly what most of the guests at the American Repertory Theater's pA.R.T.y heard in their heads when they first saw honoree Sam Waterston.

Held at the Artists for Humanity Epicenter, the high-octane affair boasted actors Chris Cooper and his equally amazing wife, Marianne, as cochairs, and it attracted the likes of graphic design guru Denise Korn, hospitality hunk Dan Mathieu and his super-hot husband, Tom Potter (sporting sexy new sideburns), retired Harvard bigwig Henry Rosovsky and his wife, Nitza, Boston Ballet honcho Mikko Nissinen, über-groovers Rachael and Andy Goldfarb, Our Lady of Armani Collette Royer, the indelible Jeremy and Jan Geidt, and stunning socialite Nina Fialkow, to name but a handful.

"Mama's feet are sore," said one woman, to which the man she was talking to replied, "Well, you look hot."

"Of course I'm hot," she said. "I'm wearing plastic, honey."

However, the evening's funniest moment came when film director Sam Weisman tried to get Cooper to bid $3,000 in the live auction. The item: a walk-on role in a movie starring Kate Hudson and Anne Hathaway—just what every Academy Award winner needs. ×××

Roamin' Holiday

In a previous career, I (barely) made a living as a travel writer. To my wanderlust mind, not much beats getting paid to explore new places. I can barely find time to plan a quick vacation these days. Surely, many of you feel the same way.

So we've done all the legwork. In this issue you'll find six weekend escapes, ritzy and rugged by nature. We like the high and the low. My husband and I once spent two months on a road trip, where a typical week involved pampering at the Bellagio then camping in national parks.

You may prefer one extreme over the other. But when it comes to summer, Bostonians have a shared agenda—the Cape, cookouts, Fenway. Leave it to Ezra to conquer the season in a day. Destination unknown, here's to warm weather.

Strait Man

TIES THAT BIND

To the average citizen, a straitjacket is an emblem of violent lunacy. To Jason Escape, a street performer and escape artist who lives in the North End, it's a lifestyle.

"It took me about six months to learn the straitjacket," says Escape, 38, who spends his afternoons wriggling out of fetters while hanging upside down from an 18-foot tripod. "My mother used to work in psychiatric wards, so she knew how to tie me up. She was really good at it."

Escape takes his act on the road, but he's most often found in front of Quincy Market, risking injury and death for the pleasure of tourists. Unlike Houdini or David Copperfield, he doesn't rest on mere spectacle. He has patter. Improv. Charisma.

"The first challenge is doing the escape, but the second is entertaining the audiences," he says. "Houdini could get away with just doing the stunt. People today expect more." Impossible physical contortions don't go as far as they used to, it seems. You need jokes.

Despite having once strained his entire upper chest, Escape has successfully rid himself of his straitjacket thousands of times. Proper stretching and hydration are vital before a show, and he has to keep in shape. Such is the price of glory. "Sometimes people give me a $100 bill and say that it was worth every penny," he says. "They say that this was truly entertainment."

Drink of the Moment

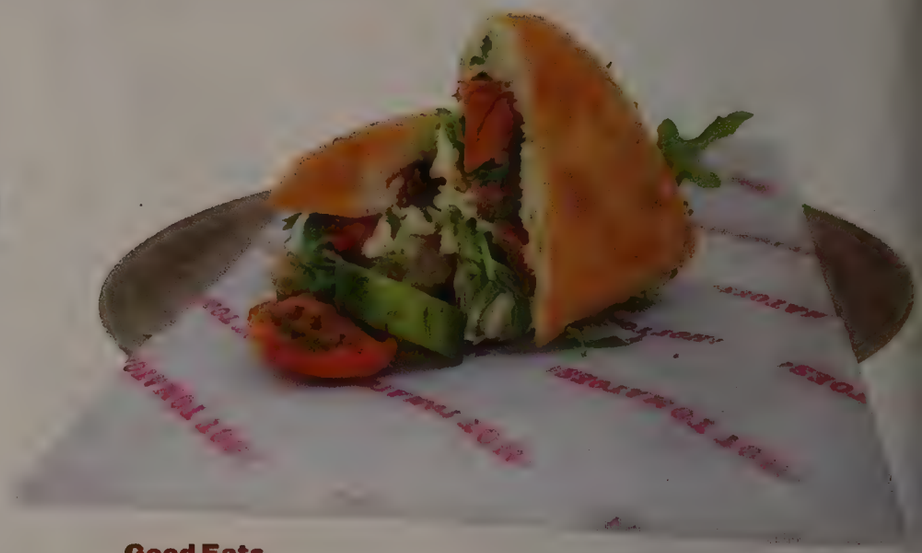
It's All Rosy

Bar chef Jason Cawthorn had one edict when it came to designing the drinks at new Financial District venue MKT. "Our food menu is a world tasting, so our cocktail menu has to be from all over," Cawthorn explains. There's chili powder in the Hot Hot, sake in the Vanish, and homemade crème brûlée powder and coconut milk in the Vodka Crème Brûlée.

For the Rose Gimlet ($12), he looked to London, turning to alconomics.com, run by legendary British barman Angus Winchester. "London is the cocktail Mecca of the world, and this guy has offices in Hong Kong, London and Sydney, where he has people go out and research cocktails," Cawthorn says. A recipe on Winchester's site called for a vodka-based rose cocktail with muddled and candied rose petals. Forgoing the vodka, Cawthorn twisted the drink into a gimlet with Hendrick's gin and muddled limes. As an alternative to Winchester's sugary mulch pile, he sprays his gimlet with rose water after mixing it with rose preserves found in the Russian markets of Brookline.

"The preserves make it sweeter, more approachable and also make it pink, so it's visually more approachable than it was," Cawthorn says. "It's also a way to get the rose petals in there. Then we garnish with a lime to show that it's a gimlet." If you close your eyes, the fresh herbal taste and floating lime suggest a drink more a boyish hue of green rather than the girly shade of pink. It's an old classic dressed in drag.

NICK ALTSCHULLER



Good Eats

Ask for the ORT

Jeff Malloy and Carmen Snell-Malloy list two acronyms on the menu at Hot Tomatoes, the spunky sister eatery to Carmen in the North End. "EVOO" (extra-virgin olive oil) we all know from nickname queen Rachael Ray. But "ORT" had us stumped—at least until the Cowgirl hit the table. Stacked high on Iggy's ciabatta, the couple's chicken-salad sandwich bursts at the seams. Its contents include decadently mayo'ed hunks of white meat, a nest of baby arugula and just about the best condiment we've ever encountered: morsels of sweet, oven-roasted tomato spilling from the sides. Get it? ORT. Munch on one, and you'll want a whole box—which can be had alongside pasta salad or Carmen's signature bolognese for a few extra bucks.

Question for Anthony Guay

What are three popular getaways for Bostonians?

Anthony Guay is a leisure travel manager at Longwood Travel in Massachusetts.

1. Aruba has been the No. 1 destination for Bostonians for years. The weather is always great, but the big draw is the casinos. That's what people go for that they can't get right in Boston.

2. Jamaica has been there forever, so people are always interested. We sell a lot in the Negril area. They have some brand-new resorts down there that the younger generation, honeymooners and others are into.

3. Riviera Maya is another hot spot. You have to fly into Cancun, and then it's about an hour-long bus ride down the coast. They're offering all kinds of all-inclusive packages and have these interchangeable deals among hotels.

Going Out

BREAK OUT

Scampo. Noun: Italian, singular of scampi, a Norwegian lobster. According to the menu at the Liberty Hotel's newest venue, "scampo" also means "to escape." Of course it does. Hey, did you hear that the Liberty used to be a jail?

Thankfully, Scampo doesn't beat you over the head with the building's history. With dark wood and accents like copper-colored orbs over the bar, the restaurant offers an inviting space, similar in chromatic scheme but more expansive than Clink's cellblock upstairs.

"It's a fun, highly energetic place," enthuses GM Eric Buxton. "There's the [cocktail] bar on one end and the mozzarella bar on the other that adds energy. And the sound system is amazing." Of course, the real draw is local icon Lydia Shire's food.

According to executive chef Mario Capone, the cuisine is modern Italian—"A little lighter, not heavy on the red sauces"—with global influences. Selecting from Scampo's extensive, meandering menu, you can start a meal with naan ($4) and spaghetti bolognese ($16) before moving to tagliata of wagyu (market price). The restaurant also has giant al forno options with suckling pig on Fridays and baby lamb on Saturdays. Capone adds, "We finish it in the pizza oven to get it crispy, and we break it down so you get a piece of the leg, a piece of the shoulder, a piece of the loin and a chop. It's a nice way to eat."

Former Sage GM Mike Paquette heads the bar, where he serves classic Italian cocktails with a twist. He also has his own creations, like the Pop Tart ($12), a blend of cachaça, framboise, muddled strawberries, lime and brown sugar. "This is my easy list, so the bartenders can learn them," says Paquette, fresh from preparing a vanilla-habañero infusion. "It's approachable. But when they get used to this, we can turn people on to something new."

The Things We Carry

If your idea of a weekend getaway is a camping trip on Lake Winnipesaukee, we hear EMS carries a wide selection of rucksacks. For more cosmopolitan destinations—the Dorchester in London, Raffles in Singapore, the Motel 6 in Braintree—you need more urbane luggage. Alexander McQueen's year-old line for Samsonite Black Label will turn the head of the most jaded skycap. British designer McQueen infused the Mansfield-based Samsonite with a jolt of European daring by using unexpected patterns found in nature—like crocodile skin and the human rib cage—to create durable yet paparazzi-worthy accessories. The hard-plastic, croc-patterned Spinner features soft, feather-printed lining with three shoe bags, a leather luggage tag and even a protective zippered case for the piece itself.

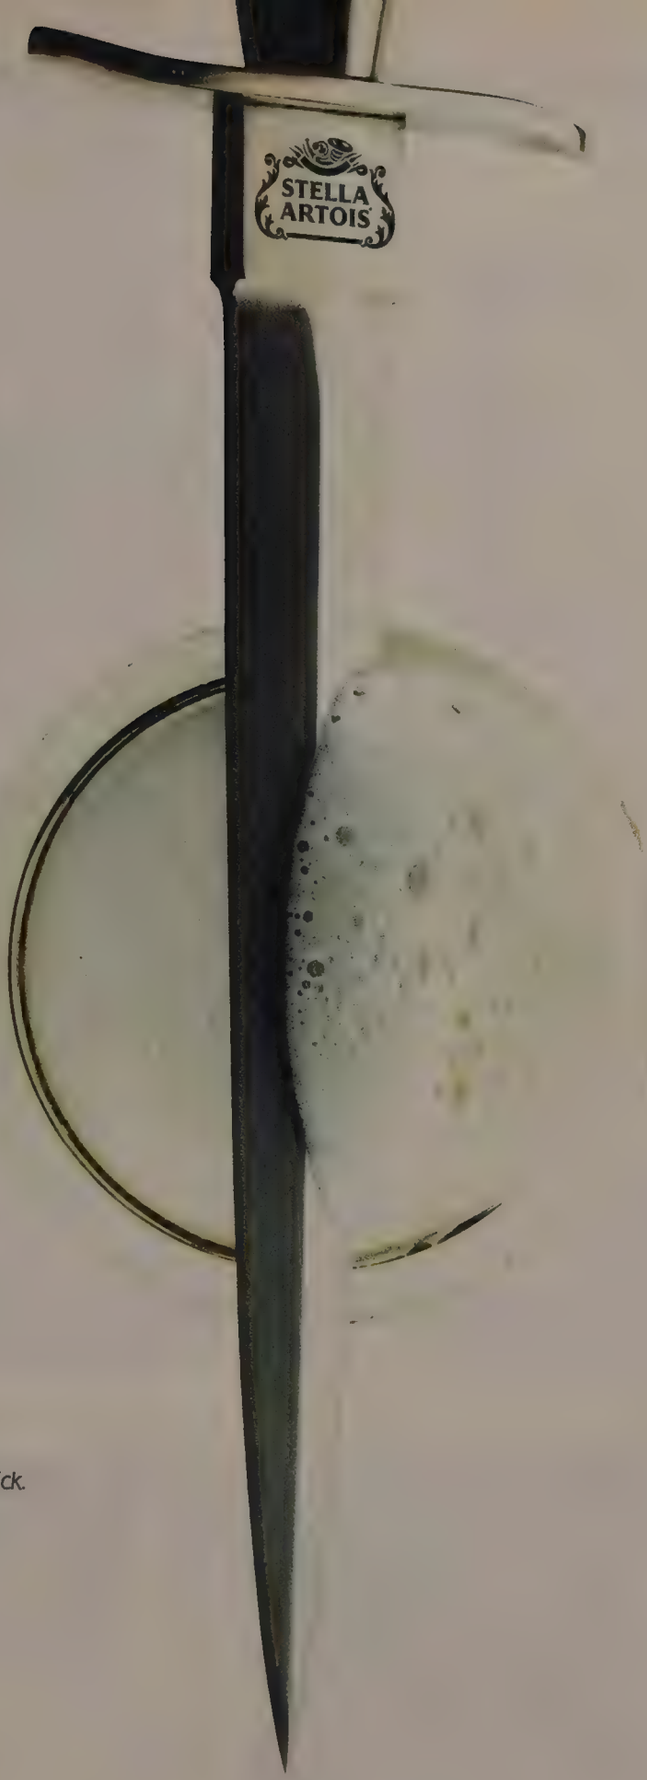
STELLA ARTOIS

Perfection HAS ITS PLACE

Perfectly poured Stella Artois is the Gold Standard of Belgian beer.



Step One THE PURIFICATION
The bartender selects the signature glass for the beer being poured. The glass is scrubbed in a cool-water bath, preferably with a mild detergent. It's then rinsed with cold water to chill the glass.

Step Two THE SACRIFICE
The tap is opened in one swift motion to let the first burst of foam flow away. It must never enter the glass, thus ensuring every drop of beer is fresh.

Step Three THE LIQUID ALCHEMY
The glass is held at a 45-degree angle to create the perfect balance of liquid to foam.

Step Four THE HEAD
The head is created by straightening and lowering the glass. The foam is visually appealing and releases the beer's aroma.

Step Five THE REMOVAL
The bartender closes the tap in one quick action and moves the glass away from the faucet to ensure no drops spoil the perfect head.

Step Six THE BEHEADING
While the beer is flowing over the edge of the glass, the bartender cuts the head gently with a head cutter at a 45-degree angle. This eliminates the larger bubbles that burst easily and accelerate the dissipation of the head.

Step Seven THE JUDGMENT
The bartender now stands in judgment. The beer's head should be two fingers thick.

Step Eight THE CLEANSING
The bartender then rinses the bottom and sides of the glass. This keeps the glass clean and cool and makes it comfortable to hold.

Step Nine THE BESTOWAL
A perfectly poured pint of Belgian beer is presented with the logos of the coaster and glass facing the customer.

Beauty

Frizz Freedom

The road to recovery stretched before me. I'd subjected my Shirley Temple curls to multiple rounds of straightening. One botched thermal reconditioning, and my sleek hair went to frizz. I was trying to grow my mane out, but it was half curly, half straight, 100 percent unattractive.

Then an intervention! My stylist Kristen Moshiek at Beaucage Salon and Spa told me about a new treatment: keratin complex therapy by Coppola. Unlike the Brazilian version, this organic product doesn't contain formaldehyde. Keratin, a protein naturally found in hair, reinfuses the shaft, making it healthier and shinier—an effect that lasts three to five months.

Desperate, I booked an appointment. The process only took two and a half hours compared to thermal reconditioning's four, and the results (after three dirty days of not washing) were much better—less stick-straight than smooth overall. The true sign of frizz-free: I've officially banished my perma-bun.

A BOUTIQUE BUSINESS

Attention shoppers:

The highly anticipated successor to Jasmine Sola, 344, has opened on Newbury Street and other locations around town. Don't expect "the total confusion of merchandise," which owner Luciano Manganella says characterized Jasmine Sola in its final two years. In a less stuffed space, 344 still stocks popular labels including Splendid and Ella Moss, plus others like William Rast and Ocean Drive.

At Monella, a newcomer to Harvard Square from Haluk Ozek of Mudo, you'll find trendier, lower-priced tops, dresses, denim and shoes—from brands such as Miss Me and Chinese Laundry—mixed with higher-end pieces from James Perse and Ernest Sewn.

Back around Newbury, Oak—Keara Sexton's brainchild—carries handmade clothing, accessories and gifts created exclusively by Boston-based artisans. Highlights include delicate necklaces, hooded sweatshirts, soft leather handbags and intricate cards.

Former Moxie maven Jessica Lynn, meanwhile, has struck out on her own in the South End with Leokadia, named for her shoe-crazed mom. Focusing primarily on European footwear, Leokadia's stock ranges from moderately priced Dolce Vita and Boutique 9 to more expensive Missoni and Moschino.

GWIZ VS. LANCE

SPECIAL REPORT

THERE HAVE BEEN SOME MEMORABLE MATCHUPS in Boston sports history: Red Sox vs. Yankees, Celtics vs. Lakers, Bruins vs. Canadiens. But my favorite of 2008 has to be my buddy and Improper Bostonian photographer Alan Gwizdowski going head-to-head with Lance Armstrong. The battle took place on the 26.2-mile course from Hopkinton to Boston in this month's marathon.

I saw Gwiz one day after he had just finished running 20 miles in the rain and asked him if he wanted to grab some food. "Yeah," he replied, "let's get some wings." I couldn't believe he'd run more in one day than I'd run collectively all year and was ready for wings, not to mention he was soaked. But that's Gwiz. He's 5'6" and 125 pounds with shaggy blonde hair, a big smile and one of the happiest dispositions around.

When we sat down to eat, I asked Gwiz why he was running the marathon. He said after he finished last year's race his mom told him about the Virginia Tech tragedy. He made up his mind right then that he was going to run again for the victims and for the school, wearing Virginia Tech clothing. I found this extremely honorable and right up Gwiz's alley.

But then, a man who I always thought was pretty sane threw me a curve ball. While dipping his buffalo wing in blue cheese, he mentioned he was planning to outrace Lance Armstrong, whose qualifying time was less than two minutes ahead of his own. As soon as he said, "Why not try to beat one of the greatest athletes ever?" I knew he was out of his mind.

Running the Boston Marathon is enough pressure without having to worry about beating a seven-time Tour de France champion and cancer survivor who has enough financial resources and corporate sponsorships to receive all the help he needs with training and more. Besides running and coursework, Gwiz has weekend hockey games, film shoots and photos that need to be taken all over the city for this magazine. I wasn't sure how he'd manage it.

Unfortunately, he didn't. He finished the race nine minutes and 48 seconds behind Armstrong's two hours, 50 minutes and 58 seconds. When I was joking with him afterward to find out if he had beaten Armstrong, he told me he fell a little short. He was slightly mad, or I should say as mad as Gwiz can get, which isn't very mad, that he didn't break three hours. He had to retie both of his shoes at different points, go off the beaten path to use the "bathroom" once and manage to run while taking photos for The Improper. And that's probably what cost him those extra seconds in hindsight. Maybe wearing a watch to keep pace would've helped.

I asked him if he was disappointed in his outcome, and he told me, "I mean, you can never be disappointed when you just finished a marathon." Right on, bud. Especially when you finish in the top 5 percent of all runners. I'm glad he remembered to feed the warrior.

BAD MEDICINE, GOOD DOG

On better health care and canine/baby relationships

Start by Washing Your Hands

IN BETTER, Boston surgeon Atul Gawande looks, practically, at the ways medicine can improve. Grueling tales of polio, still rampant in Asia half a century after Salk's vaccine, led to an impressive "mop-up" so well focused that in one week 250 million children in eight countries were vaccinated. That kind of blazing advancement has been beamed to save wounded soldiers: Between World War II and Vietnam, injury-to-hospital time was reduced from 11 hours down to one. Even the simple, crucial act of doctors washing their hands, the magic "cure" for childbed fever long ago, has returned as an issue in hospital-borne infections. Low-tech equipment, signs and protocols have fiercely urged physicians toward this potentially life-saving action. "Positive deviance" asks people to continue to do useful, simple things rather than more ornate, expensive ones—in the name of health. Grading doctors, measuring newborns on standardized scales, closely monitoring cystic fibrosis patients all make things better.

Best-selling author Atul Gawande of Brigham and Women's Hospital and Dana-Farber Cancer Institute discusses matters of medical ethics and efficacy in Better.

HANDY ADVICE Eliminate infections.

SNOUT OF DESPAIR Rid your pet of envy.

When Your First Child Is a Dog

"PARENTS" OF A BELOVED pooch may feel worried about bringing a human baby into the family. In this action-packed class, the Pawsitive Dog's Jenifer Vickery explains, very specifically, how to introduce a newborn through smells, household rituals and infant noises, even using a doll as an early surrogate for the prospective rival. While keeping the loving connection with their pooch during pregnancy, parents are taught to practice carefully phased exercises—using feet to push their dog a bit away, snuggling up with him or her, setting limits, leashing and crating, sharing the car safely, getting into the pup's low-down locales, where that little person will roam. A ringingly distinct vocabulary helps establish rules and hierarchy, wrapped in warmly gratifying rewards—both in words and snacks. Vickery may have been an energetic dog in a past life—she has so much zip, understanding of canine needs and appreciation for the subtleties of keeping Fido and Baby safe and happy together.

Trainer Jenifer Vickery of the Pawsitive Dog (70 Southampton St., Boston; 617-541-1000) offers classes in sibling accord between pooch and newborn.

Bee Good Some people have dogs. Mike Graney has bees. Lots of them—like thousands. And come spring's first burst of blossoms, they'll get to work, feeding Graney's childhood addiction to local honey. The self-professed "bee geek" keeps two "pet" hives on his Forest Hills front porch and a larger troupe of production colonies in a Mattapan community garden. These churn out just enough sweet stuff for him to fill a few neighborhood shop shelves. Their glossy, ripe, almost wine-y nectar boasts a tinge of tongue-stinging tartness, which Graney swears is unique to New England flora. One spoonful and that teddy-bear squeeze bottle in your pantry will be long forgotten. ELIZABETH BOMZE

KEN IN CAT FIGHT!

Oringer triumphs in Iron Chef battle...

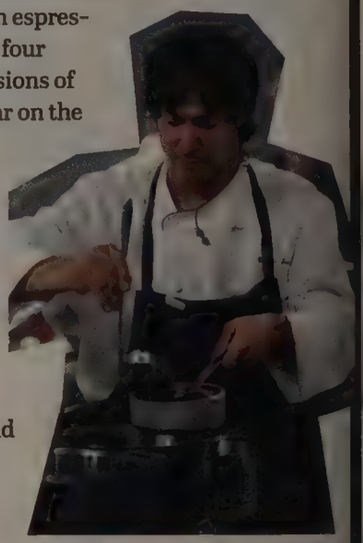
AFTER THE THRILL OF WINNING the World Series, can any stadium-based victory amount to more than a hill of beans? Yes, if you're a fan of Iron Chef America, a devotee of Ken Oringer's adventurous yet refined cuisine and, perhaps, a connoisseur of coffee—the "secret ingredient" Oringer used to defeat Iron Chef Cat Cora.

In addition to putting his best pig's foot forward (in a pressure cooker, with coffee beans), Oringer created a confit-style venison cooked in espresso oil, along with four other dishes, versions of which now appear on the menu at Clio.



Chef Ken Oringer

Perhaps the most difficult challenge for Oringer was keeping his victory secret between the show's September taping and April air date. "I had to sign a nondisclosure agreement," he says. "I didn't tell anyone; I don't trust anyone in this day and age!"

Just a few months ago, Jeffrey Fournier, chef/owner of 51 Lincoln in Newton Highlands, was whipping a West Roxbury steakhouse into shape. But not long after Fournier started, the investors had a sudden change of heart. Word has it that he showed up to work one day to find the place padlocked.

"I've been told I'm not supposed to talk about it," Fournier says carefully. "No hard feelings. It gives me more time to focus on 51 Lincoln, which is now open seven days a week, and I've got a new prix-fixe menu on Mondays."

Out in Wellesley, Ming Tsai is putting the finishing touches on Blue Ginger's major expansion, which will nearly double the restaurant's size. In addition to three private dining rooms, a more spacious lounge will feature "Ming's Bings," Tsai's East-meets-West take on the all-American burger bar. The name comes from "xian bing," a pork-stuffed dumpling that's a popular Asian street food. We say, Bing it on!

MOOO-TIFUL

Don't let the name of this stellar steakhouse keep you away.

My initial pessimism about the direction of fine dining at XV Beacon Hotel has proved groundless. What put me off was the onomatopoetic name that replaced the perfectly respectable moniker, the Federalist, which served this upscale establishment for seven years. Fortunately, the first-rate team of restaurateurs that acquired this spot (headed by Jamie Mammano) has maintained the same high standards set by their other ventures: L'Andana, Mistral, Sorellina and Teatro. "Mooo" notwithstanding, class will out.

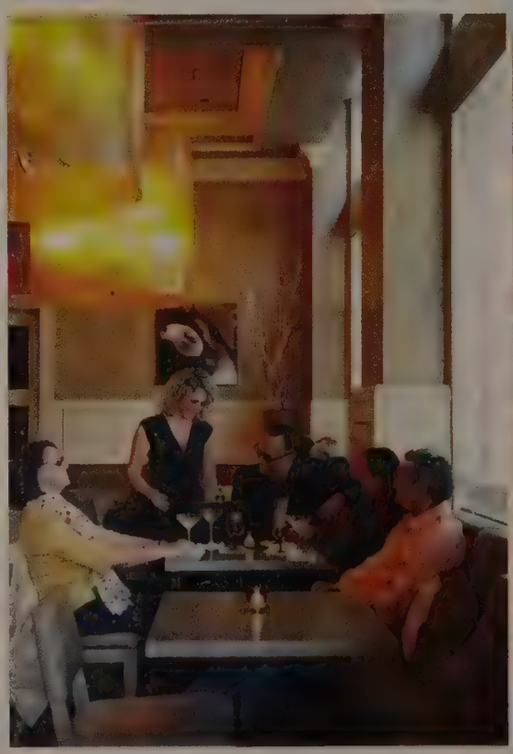
My strategy for dining at luxury restaurants without breaking the bank includes ordering certain side dishes as starters, which are almost always priced in the single digits. Asparagus plays this role perfectly, and Mooo's steamed version ($9) proved spectacular. Nine thick, firm pieces, peeled to render them flawlessly tender, came with a well-constructed, lemony Hollandaise sauce. From the 13 listed appetizers—average price $17—the Caesar salad ($13) and potato-and-leek clam chowder ($12) demonstrated how well the kitchen handles the classics. The salad's dressing had a good balance of garlic and mustard, while the chowder's tender belly clams swam in a delicious broth.

But this is a steakhouse—hence the bovine name—and meat will define its success. Tempted by the designer steaks from boutique American ranches ($28–$62) and the even more extravagant six-ounce Kobe sirloin



MORE THAN MEAT Diners at Mooo enjoy Cornish game hen and beets with goat cheese.

($120), I settled instead on the rib eye ($39). Perfect! Well-marbled, as this cut should be, it was grilled to the precise degree of doneness requested, "on the rare side of medium rare," nicely seared on the outside and warm but red within. A large bone filled with marrow-enriched garlic butter accompanied it. Two double-thick Colorado lamb rib chops ($38), meanwhile, equaled the steak in pure, carnivorous enjoyment, roasted to a succulent turn.

Chilean 2006 Secreto Malbec

Non-red-meat eaters fared just as well. Grilled Alaskan king salmon ($22 at lunch, $33 at dinner) arrived on a pallet of six asparagus spears. The salmon was firm and flavorful, enhanced by a touch of lemon, butter and sea salt. Skillet-roasted Cornish game hen ($24) appeared to be more a small broiler, which the kitchen rubbed with salt, lemon, pepper, garlic and rosemary, then roasted at a high temperature to yield crispy skin and succulent flesh.

The only sweet I sampled at Mooo, a wedge of chocolate cake ($11) with chocolate sauce and ice cream, rivaled the gargantuan dessert portions of competitor Smith & Wollensky across town. From Mooo's wine selection—pared down somewhat from the encyclopedic Federalist list that distinguished this venue when it first opened—I enjoyed a couple of excellent, value-priced choices: a Chilean 2006 Secreto Malbec ($35), its full flavor and smooth but structured body as beautiful as its eye-catching label; and Vina Alarga ($25), a Spanish grenache, pleasantly fruity but with good acidity to complement the food.

The luxurious surroundings, in which Mooo's fine cuisine takes center stage, aren't much changed from the Fed in look and feel—high ceilings coffered with massive beams, muted lighting from giant shaded chandeliers, square columns, soft banquettes and a mixture of low- and high-backed chairs. Table settings include sleek, sharp (literally and figuratively) steak knives of ebony and steel, large salt and pepper grinders, and white napery. Service was—except for an initial period of inattentiveness on two of my three visits—professional and polished; solicitous, but not obsequious; friendly, but not chummy. The pedigree of this place, and the stewardship of Mammano and his team, are apparent. ×××

REALTY CHECK

The Boston housing market remains wicked expensive.

I've been looking at houses lately. Why? Because I'm savvy. I read the paper. The housing market is in the dumps. Every house on your street is facing foreclosure. Realtors are driving their Audis off cliffs. There are deals to be had, and this is the time for a smart investor like myself to swoop in like a vulture and pick the bones of some poor sucker who got in over his head. The days of ludicrous real estate prices are over, and if you think otherwise you're stuck in 2005. But after looking at a few open houses one recent weekend, I've noticed one little problem with this supposition: Nobody told the saps selling their homes.

I'll preface this by saying that I didn't actually look at any foreclosed properties. My parents bought a foreclosed house once, and the previous owner took all the light bulbs and left a little present in the toilet. That's the kind of added value I don't need. Plus, as anyone who's seen The Goonies can tell you, foreclosed properties are usually saved at the last minute by a scrappy band of youngsters who escaped the diabolical Fratelli family and claimed One-Eyed Willy's treasure to pay off that subprime 5/1 ARM. And then what? You're right back at square one, buddy.

So we checked out open houses, mostly around Quincy—the City of Presidents and the Clam Box. Open houses give me a serious case of the creepy-crawlies. Unlike certain people called my wife, I don't enjoy traipsing around other people's abodes. One time I went to a Viking museum in York, England, and even the static Viking-life tableaus there made me feel uncomfortable, like I was intruding. I'm sorry, Thor, I didn't mean to interrupt your private pre–Middle Ages dinner with my curiosity about all things Viking. I promise I won't go into your closet and rummage through your helmets, shields, pillage-spoils and stuff. Don't mind me.

The open houses were surprisingly busy, given that the stories in the Globe real estate section had led me to believe that nobody's sold a property in Greater Boston in the past several years. However, I'm not sure what percentage of the crowd at any given place actually comprised legit buyers. I repeatedly heard the cheerful declaration, "I'm just a neighbor!" Now, first of all, how weird is it that nosy neighbors are infesting open houses? Second, how weird is it that in the real estate world, it's socially acceptable to openly declare, "Oh, don't mind me. I have no intention of buying this place. I just enjoy snooping around"? If I ever held an open house for my own place, I'd post photos of my neighbors for the real estate agent and give instructions for them to be shot on sight. (Not my neighbors who read The Improper, obviously! Mary, Dave and George are welcome to stop by and wonder aloud what we were thinking with all the Asian stuff in the bedroom.)

Open houses give me a serious case of the creepy-crawlies.

There are other problems with the open house procedure—not just for the seller, but for me. Open houses cause conflict. I approach the viewing schedule with military precision: We have a list of candidates, and we shall stick to the list. Heather sees a sign by the road and says, "Oh, open house! Let's look!" forcing me to point out that the open house in question looks like a set from the Saw movies. It's hard to overlook the gang of skinheads setting fire to the roof and the above-ground pool filled with the dead bodies of other open-housers. I mean, honestly—as if we'd buy a place with an above-ground pool. And she'll say, "Fine! Be closed-minded! It might be nice inside, but I guess we'll never know."

The opposite problem also arises: Instead of wasting time at places you'd never want to live, you waste time at places that you could never afford to live. I conceded to step into one such handsome edifice on the Squantum Peninsula. It had a huge yard, ocean views and a master bath so large and elaborate that I expected to find it occupied by sweaty Romans. It cost nearly ■ million dollars. "She's flexible on the price, though," the agent told us. That was good to hear, because I'm flexible on how much imaginary money I have.

Back in reality, a three-bedroom house with ocean views was going for $439,000, which seemed pretty reasonable—until I looked it up on Zillo.com and saw that the current owners bought it for $200,000 in 1997. So this is what constitutes a market crash? Getting a mere 220 percent return in 11 years? Maybe it isn't yet the perfect time to buy. But with unsold houses piling up on the market and sellers still refusing to drop their prices, it's never been a better time to go try on your neighbor's underwear. ✖✖✖

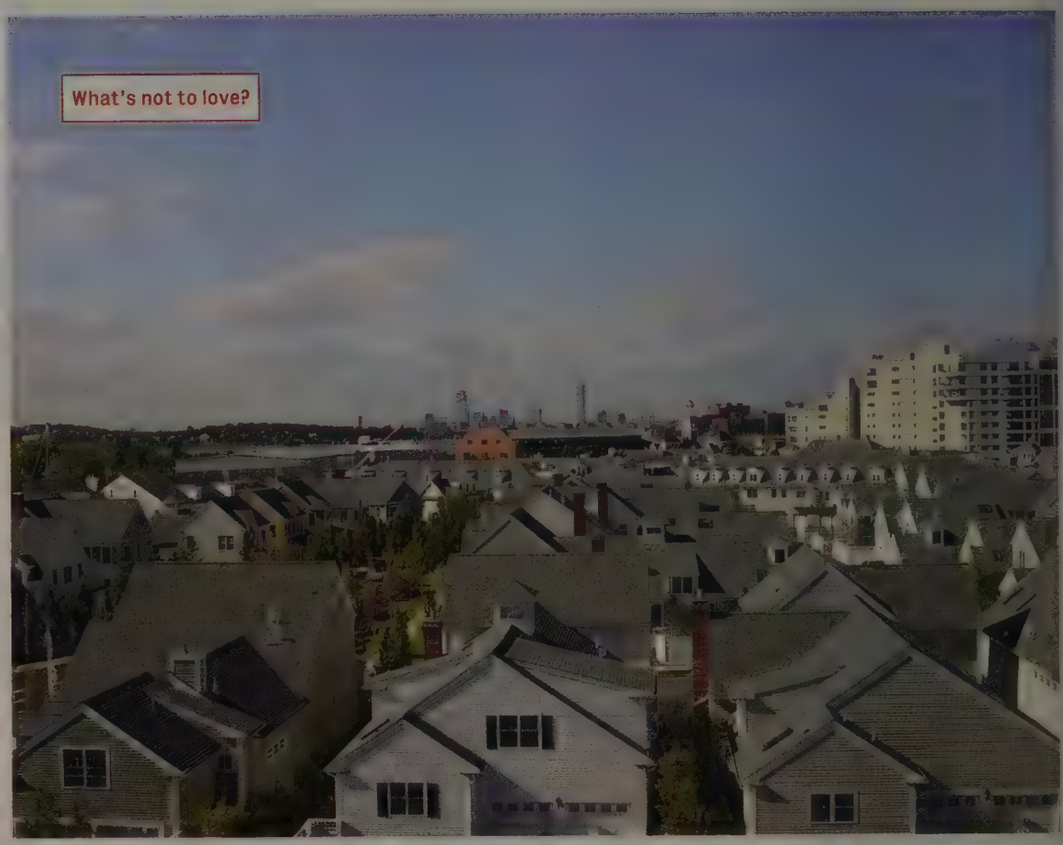
HOME AGAIN

Why our writer can't leave town for more than a week.



When I'm away from Boston for more than a week, I miss it. After the recent death of Jess Cain, I got to thinking about what specifically I'm nostalgic for. Most of you don't remember Cain, but he ruled Boston radio in the mornings on WHDH for more than 34 years. He was an original, funny guy, and his passing reminded me of some of the city's defining attributes: the sarcasm, the grit of the neighborhoods, the sense of humor, often laced with irony.

When my first novel was published, I wrote a letter (long before e-mail) to Jess, trying to get onto his show. I recall doing something really stupid. I was supposed to be on at 8 am, prime commuting time, good for planting messages like "Buy my book." But I was terrified of appearing dumb and boring in front of Cain. So I had a Bloody Mary at 7:30 in the morning. False courage. After my 10 minutes on the radio, he said to me, "You drink tomato juice in the morning? You got a red mustache."

Adrenaline pumping from being on air, I admitted, "It was a Bloody Mary."

Cain smiled. "If you're ever gonna make it in show biz, kid," he said, "simulate stuff like that. Don't actually do it." And he went back to being the town's most popular radio personality ever.

In addition to characters like Cain, I miss the political brawls here—how everything, every insult, every slight from childhood is never forgiven nor forgotten. In these days of cyber-indiscretion, public fools should heed the words of Martin Lomasney, old-time ward boss and political master even before the Kennedys. "Never write down anything if you can speak it," he said, "and never speak when you can nod."

Speaking of wayward souls, here's a Boston story from another life: I was walking to Beacon Hill from downtown. As it poured rain, darkness crawled in. I headed up the Hill by the rear of the State House. Without an umbrella, I planned to slip into a doorway and wait for the sky to calm down. But the niche I chose was already taken.

I couldn't live anywhere else for long. It's the contrasts, always light and dark beneath the surface.

A couple, locked in a kiss that looked right out of Paris, jumped apart as I ducked in. I didn't know the young woman. But the man was one of the most powerful politicians in Massachusetts. He actually smiled at me and put his finger to his lips, saying "Sshhhh." I looked for another refuge. Stuff like this makes me miss Boston.

It's such a small world here. A guy who works in my office was in my kindergarten class. He remembers our principal, a woman who was a great educator, extolled by our city when she retired. She used to take naughty children over her knee and spank them. The kids feared her and almost never misbehaved. The parents loved her. Try this today in Newton, where she taught.

I also miss the people who could tell me the stories of times before ours in Boston. I have a friend who mourns the loss of a generation that shared tales of the past, who grew up in triple-deckers with grandparents, parents and children all living cheek by jowl, when families were big and so were the legends. "I drive around to the old neighborhoods at least twice a year," he said. "I look at every house I lived in. I'd drive by and park and think, 'Jeez. Was every family as dysfunctional as mine?' And I'd end up saying, 'Yeah. They probably were.'" Mystic River exists in almost all of our neighborhoods. I couldn't live anywhere else for long. It's the contrasts, always light and dark beneath the surface.

Boston gets its spirit from attitudes as well. There are 21 distinct neighborhoods in our city, from Brighton to East Boston, Mattapan to Southie, and they all have stories that draw you back like boomerangs. When my wife and I were dating, I'd tell her about the shady side of my town: bookies, gamblers, hit men, murders. She would say to me, "Did you see this in the paper? A body found in the trunk of a car at Logan?"

"Yeah," I'd reply. "He was a few years ahead of me in high school. Used to hang out at the bowling alley in Coolidge Corner."

Old Bostonians crop up everywhere. In California I ran into a man who lived down the street from me when I was a kid. I hadn't seen him in 30-plus years. He was looking sleek and prosperous. He eyed me and smiled. "So," he said, "still the wise ass, I'm sure. Are you still the worst first baseman I've ever seen?"

"Hey," I said. "I was a good first baseman, I just couldn't hit."

"Know thyself," he said. Once a prig, always a prig.

It may sound weird, but it's these things I miss about this town of digs and grudges and so much pride. ×××

TAKE 5

The School of Sports { RICH LEVINE }

ON THE PLAYOFFS, JACOBY, PHIL KESSEL AND SPYGATE

5 ON THE PLAYOFF PUSH

Yeah, Washington Sounds Cool... After initially wavering on which team we'd rather face in the second round, it took one quarter of basketball to want absolutely nothing to do with the Cavs. Wishing for LeBron (regardless of his supporting cast) is like wishing for canker sores.

Back It Up, Sam... No complaints so far about the Sam Cassell Experiment, but it's clear at this point that he's not much more than a security blanket. Rondo's proven he should be on the court no matter what the situation or matchup. Maybe they can just store Sam I Am in a glass case that reads, "Only Break in Case of Foul Trouble."

Players' Choice... In a recent interview with ESPN, both Paul Pierce and Kevin Garnett admitted that Ray Allen's their choice to take the last shot. Assuming Brian Scalabrine is inactive, we'd still rather give the ball to Pierce but should probably just side with KG and the Truth on this one.

Positive Thinking... An actual conversation we had with Hawks center Al Horford while waiting on line for breakfast last week. The Improper: "Hey Al, not sure if you should get those brunch eggs—might slow you down tonight." Horford: "I'm pretty sure [the Celtics] are gonna be all right either way." Now that's the stuff that upsets are made of!

Bat Boy's Revenge... Mike Bibby calling out C's fans for being fair-weathered reminds us of Superbad, when Seth makes fun of that kid for pissing his pants in the fourth grade. It's such a desperate attempt to gain an edge that it's impossible to be mad. You've just got to laugh.

1 TRIP DOWN MEMORY LANE

The 1995 Western Conference Semifinals were on TV the other day, which was cool on many levels: numerous Dream Shakes, Charles Barkley and Kenny Smith facing off (obviously unaware of how their paths would cross) and, most notably, Danny Ainge and Cassell guarding each other for a couple of possessions. Cassell would go on to win his second NBA title. Meanwhile, Rondo was only 9 years old.

2 BRUINS FAREWELLS

Get Your Phil... Isn't Claude Julien's three-game benching of Phil Kessel almost an unforgivable eff-up? The Bruins ranked 24th out of 30 in scoring during the regular season, and somehow it makes sense to pull their third-leading scorer? That's like Doc Rivers saying, "Hey Ray, I know it's Game 7 tonight, but we're going with Tony Allen. Hope you understand."

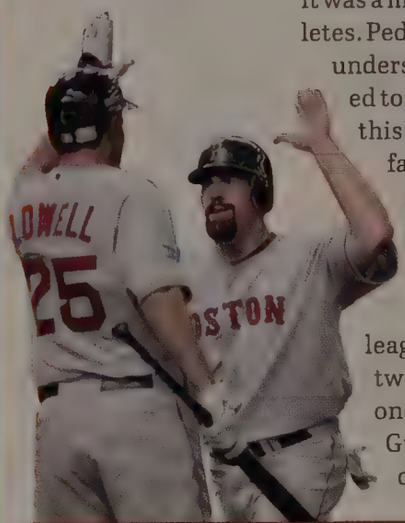
Love the Hate... The greatest thing about this series (aside from Kathryn Tappen saying "Nifty") was how much the two teams hated each other. You know Chara and Lucic weren't having steaks with Patrice Brisbois after the game. Which is more than you can say for the Red Sox and Yankees.

4-Part Red Sox Ass-Kissing Parade

Honey, Why Are They Booing Him?... In a world where athletes will bitch about anything, you've got to love Kevin Youkilis. The guy wins the Gold Glove at first but still has no qualms about moving to third base for a few weeks. How many other players would be cool with that? More important, how many would be versatile enough to seamlessly make the switch and still manage to hit above .350?

Our Bad... A couple of months ago we wrote that we'd be willing to part with Jacoby Ellsbury for Johan Santana. On closer inspection, we're completely moronic. Ellsbury's about two years away from becoming one of the biggest athletes in Boston.

Dustin Move... When Dustin Pedroia wore a Rondo jersey to Game 1 against the Hawks, it was a meeting of our two favorite local athletes. Pedroia's actually helped us slightly understand why so many girls are attracted to a-holes. At first it was like, "Wow, this dude's kind of a punk." But now, the fact that he's always running his mouth is what makes him so likable.



Closing Argument... Somewhat lost in the early Sox fanfare is Jonathan Papelbon. He leads the league in saves, he strikes out almost two batters each inning—and no one's really even raised an eyebrow. Guess that's just the greatness we've come to expect.

3 DATES TO WATCH

5/4 This is the scheduled date for Game 7 of both the Celtics' and the Cavs' series. We're pretty sure the C's will be resting, so let's hope the Cavs are still fighting... and Game 7 goes to five OTs... and LeBron plays all 73 minutes.

5/5 The Sox kick off a 10-game, 10-day road trip that takes them to Detroit, Minnesota and Baltimore. OK, so it's actually an eight-game road trip followed by two at Fenway South.

5/13 Matt Walsh finally heads to NFL HQ for his long-awaited meeting with Roger Goodell. If the evidence is damaging to the Pats, ESPN promises to go live to the depths of hell for Gregg Easterbrook, Arlen Specter and John Tomase's champagne-popping ceremony.

Soroff On RIB HILLIS

Extreme Makeover's newest star on his unusual name, SoCal beauty tips and on-set hypothermia

The newest addition to ABC's Extreme Makeover: Home Edition, model/actor/handyman Rib Hillis was born in Suffern, N.Y., and raised in Newton. After graduating from Newton South, he attended Lehigh University and the University of Colorado, where he was discovered by a modeling agent. He lived in Europe and traveled the world as a model for several years, appearing in such publications as Uomo, Vogue, GQ, Esquire and Men's Health. He got his first acting break on the General Hospital spin-off Port Charles and has since been on such shows as Ugly Betty, CSI and CSI: Miami. He also has a starring role in the Mexican indie film Propriedad Ajena, which came out in November. He lives with his wife, Melissa Blackler, and their 4-year-old twins, Dane and Hannah, in southern California.

Jonathan Soroff: What's up with the name Rib?
Rib Hillis: [Chuckles.] When I was a little boy I got the nickname Ribbit from catching frogs. When we moved from upstate New York to Newton, I think it was the first day of third grade, and the teacher said, "This is our new student, Robert," which is my given name. She said, "Should we call you Bob, Bobby, Robert?" and I said, "Call me Ribbit." Everyone picked up on it. My mother is the only person who calls me Robert.

Do you cry during Extreme Makeover*?*
I cried a lot when I watched it before I was on it, and I had to actually stop watching because it was depressing the hell out of me. Then I got onto the show and was surprised. Don't underestimate the power of a good soundtrack: The twinkling in the background, the swelling violins, those things really pull at the heartstrings.

Thing you miss most about Boston?
My friends. My best friends in the world are the ones I grew up with. They keep me grounded. I remember after living in Europe for two years, I picked up this sort of pseudo-Euro accent, saying things like, "So we go now, no?" My friends would look at me and say, "What the f is wrong with you?" They pulled me back from the brink.

What's your single greatest talent?
I make a really good pizza. I can also ride a six-foot unicycle and juggle. In fact, I was in the Newton Tab riding my unicycle to school when I was a kid. I even won the Mr. Lehigh contest in college by riding my unicycle to "Bust a Move."

On Port Charles*, you played a doctor...*
I did. I was Dr. Jake Marshak.

So who, besides your wife, would you most like to play doctor with?
I think Angelina Jolie would probably be on the top of that list.

How important are your looks?
I've made a living off of them. We have a rule in my house when I'm wrestling with my kids: You can hit me anywhere, just not the face.

Ever use your looks for evil?
I've used my charm to get things like free upgrades to first class. You just have to know who to talk to, and when they say, "We can't do that," it's bullshit. They can do it. All it takes is a few strokes on a keyboard. Give 'em a sob story, bat your eyelashes, flirt, whatever. It works. It even helped me get my wife. I was able to charm her into marrying me after just four days.

Four days? Would you call yourself impulsive?
I am nothing but impulsive. I'm like a lab rat. I act solely on instinct. I will keep doing unhealthy or negative things endlessly, until there's some shock to stop me. Sometimes it's amazingly beneficial and good—you run off and marry this amazing woman after four days—and other times, it bites you in the ass.

With respect to your looks, how much of it is DNA and how much is hard work?
I gotta say it's all DNA. It's genetics. I work out and take care of myself and eat right, but that in and of itself doesn't explain anything. I was very fortunate that I turned out to be a good combination of my mother and father.

Beauty secrets or workout regimen?
I think the world would be a more attractive place if we didn't wear clothes, because you couldn't hide your shit. So my beauty secret is, live in southern California and spend most of your time in a bathing suit. You'll get in shape quickly.

Worst modeling assignment you ever had?
The toughest was a TV commercial for Power Bar. They took me two miles out to sea in a Speedo and I had to swim around a buoy in the open ocean. The water temperature was 52 degrees, and I was in and out of the water for maybe eight hours. I was severely hypothermic when it was over. It was 80 degrees out, but I had to sit in a car with the heat cranked for three hours before I could drive home.

One thing you'd never do for a job?
Actually, there's nothing I wouldn't do for a job. I have children. So I would wear a sealskin coat, smoking a cigarette, pouring oil into the Alaskan Sound, if you offered me money. I learned a long time ago that it's not my job to have scruples if I want to work.

Do you see yourself as an actor, a model or what?
Well, I do consider myself an actor, but it's definitely not something that comes naturally to me. Modeling is something I've done since 1992, and it's just one of those things I can do. But at the end of the day, I'm not fulfilled by it. Acting is something I've found a passion for and I work hard at, and I hope to have success doing it.

When you worked as a handyman, did you ever have a client come on to you?
No! And I wish I did. Not only that, I've never even been offered a happy ending in a massage, and every other guy I know has. My life has been relatively tame in that respect.

Do people assume you're just a pretty face?
I suppose. We all make assumptions the second someone walks in the door: "They're just a nerd." "They're just a mom." "They're just whatever." That's fine. Ninety percent of what I do for a living involves my physical appearance and there's nothing I can do about it. But there's a lot more to everyone than meets the eye, and if you take the time to talk to them, you'll usually be surprised by what you find out.

Last question: If you could change one thing about yourself, what would it be and why?
I would be much more humble and I would remove any hubris from my system, because it definitely leads to a downfall. Humility is to live without arrogance, and that's a worthwhile goal. ✖✖✖

Weekend Escapes

Go rugged or ritzy on these spa trips.

Spring? What spring?

For Bostonians, winter feels interminable. Which is why the first 60-degree day in April is such a drastic thaw. People on the T begin to grin. Skirt lengths rise. Students go away. Happy thoughts bloom like crocuses, and something that died in mid-January, during the last Nor'easter, is reborn.

It's during this joyous season that locals undertake a ritual known as the road trip. According to tradition, it begins by throwing yourself into the black hole of traffic on I-93, then emerging, hours later, at a motel in Hyannis Port. But there are more original choices for your gas money.

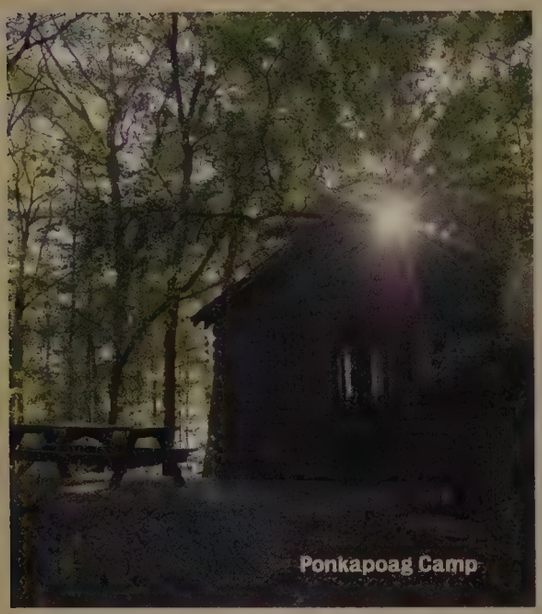
We've found them. Three pairs, reached by land, sea and air. Each duo offers a rugged and a ritzy option, with all the details on getting and being there. Having visited them ourselves (life's tough), we can guarantee their worthiness. Plus, they can be done in a long weekend, which means you'll hardly miss a Sox game.

By Land

Rugged Cabins in New Hampshire and Massachusetts

It's time for cabin fever. Not Jack Nicholson–with-an-axe winter craziness, but the catharsis of an overnight stay in one of New England's choicest outdoor locations. Among the dozens available for rent, four places stand out. Billings Lodge in New Hampshire's White Mountains is a "luxurious" cabin (it has electricity and a shower) at the base of a vast network of trails exploring Mounts Madison and Adams. Also in New Hampshire, Doublehead Cabin is reached by a 1.8-mile uphill hike—and offers spectacular views. In the Berkshires, the Mohawk Trail State Forest is the site of six cabins on the banks of the Cold River. It's an idyllic place to fish, loiter or traipse around old-growth forest. Closest to home, Ponkapoag Camp at the Blue Hills Reservation has 20 cabins and a 230-acre pond, mere minutes from I-93.

Although all four sites are readily accessible, they're not exactly the Four Seasons with squirrels. Forget about indoor plumbing, fitted sheets and free HBO. You'll need to bring sleeping bags, cooking equipment and, of course, a cordless blender—those midafternoon piña coladas on the porch don't make themselves.



Ponkapoag Camp

Getting There

With the exception of Doublehead Cabin, the retreats can be reached by car. Billings Lodge and Doublehead Cabin are located in New Hampshire's White Mountains in the towns of Randolph (four hours from Boston) and Jackson (three hours), respectively. In Massachusetts, the entrance to Mohawk Trail State Forest is 21 miles west of Greenfield on Route 2 (two and a half hours); Ponkapoag Camp lies within the Blue Hills Reservation near Milton (30 minutes) and is accessed via a mile-long dirt road.

Staying There

Billings Lodge ($60 per night) has the highest capacity, holding up to 10 people, and can be reserved up to three weeks in advance. Doublehead Cabin ($20 per night, plus a $9 reservation fee) can accommodate a maximum of eight people. Mohawk Trail State Forest cabins are available in two sizes: small (maximum three people, $30 per night) and large (five people, $50 per night). There is a one-week minimum rental in July and August, two-night minimum during the rest of the year. Ponkapoag Camp cabins hold between two and six people. Weekend rentals are available until mid-June ($30–$50 per cabin, two-night minimum); after that cabins must be rented by the week ($140–$200 per cabin) through Labor Day.

Eating There

Kraft singles or herbed chèvre–your culinary fate depends on what you pack. But even the fussiest gourmands will love Shelburne Falls Coffee Roasters (413-625-2123, ibuycoffee.com), a Berkshires institution with delicious java. En route to the White Mountains, Zeb's General Store (800-676-9294, zebs.com) in the center of North Conway is another must-stop.

Playing There

Biking, fishing and paddling are possibilities at many of the cabins. Hiking opportunities abound. You're in the middle of a pristine woodland paradise. Use it.

Ritzy Twin Farms in Vermont

Vermont's Twin Farms is less a luxury resort than a question of finances. If paying $2,850 per night for a chalet rental sounds like a steal, then, to paraphrase a French queen, go ahead and eat all the damn cake you want. Which at Twin Farms would mean an exquisite praline cheesecake with crispy caramel bananas, glass tangerine sorbet, milk chocolate sauce and candied hazelnuts.

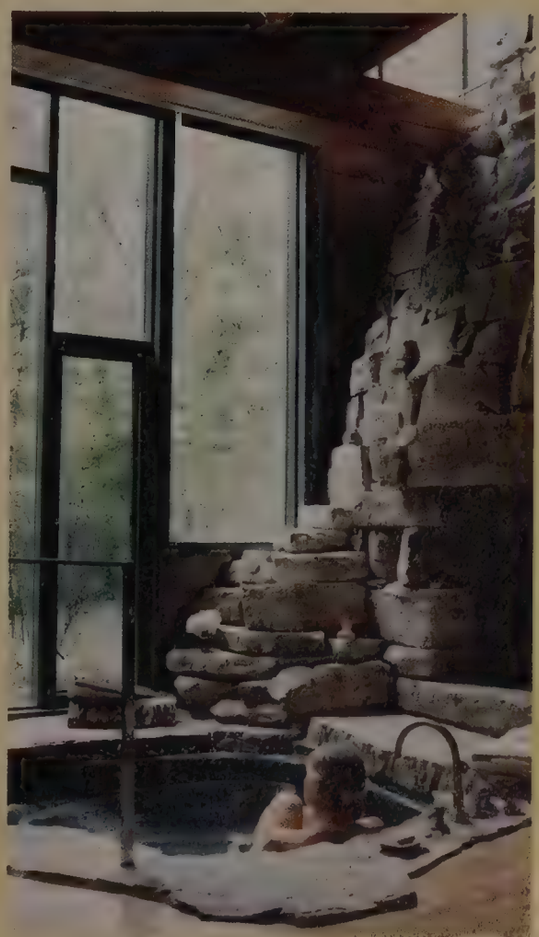
Set on 300 acres of woodland in Barnard, one of Vermont's most graphically quaint villages, Twin Farms is secluded enough to thwart the paparazzi, yet civilized enough to sport a Japanese furo (soaking pool) and a 26,000-bottle wine cellar. The vertical plunge of the landscape is softened by wildflower meadows, streams and apple trees. Ten distinct cottages blend into the maple woods around the main building, a New England farmhouse once owned by writers Sinclair Lewis and Dorothy Thompson. There's no check-in. Guests are greeted in the driveway and served a drink in front of the fireplace, while their bags are whisked away by one of the resort's ubiquitous attendants (there's a two-to-one staff-to-guest ratio). For further peace of mind, children aren't permitted, so you can rest assured that you'll actually rest.

Getting There

It's three hours by car, not counting stops for maple syrup and cheese. Head up I-93 to I-89, then shoot across New Hampshire to Route 4 in central Vermont. A winding drive past quilted farms and stores selling Irish sweaters and garden gnomes brings you to Woodstock. From here, follow Route 12 to Barnard and hang a right at the folksy rustics sitting on the porch of the General Store. An understated iron gate, just far enough back from the gravel road to be nearly invisible, is the only indicator that you've arrived in the lap of luxury.

Staying There

Twin Farms has 20 different accommodation options, each of them stocked with unique furnishings. The suites in the Main House sport a B&B aesthetic rooted in antique desks, needlepoint and fusty art ($1,200–$1,350 per night). The cottages are more unusual. They all boast fireplaces and screened porches, while some have original David Hockneys and granite hot tubs ($1,850–$2,850 per night). The Aviary, for example, is a two-story glass, cedar and stone confection by architect Peter Bohlin, with floor-to-ceiling windows, a massive fireplace and a treetop porch. Each cottage is lavish enough to make the decorators at the Ritz bang their heads against their full marble bathrooms and weep.



Eating There

Food and liquor are included in the price of accommodation, making Twin Farms a genuine glutton's playground. There are no fixed menus. Guests fill out a questionnaire on their preferences, and executive chef Ted Ask customizes their meals accordingly. He showcases local, seasonal produce in dishes like five-spiced citrus duck with nut-brown cabbage and golden beets, but more international flavors appear in extravagances like a six-course truffle dinner. Meals can be taken in the rustic dining room, in your suite or cottage, or in the bodega-like cloister of the wine cellar. The kitchen never closes, in case you have a hankering for hardwood-grilled salmon with a crayfish-tarragon essence and a compote of baby fennel at 3 am. A complimentary wine list emphasizes West Coast vineyards, but there's no shortage of Bollinger and Perrier-Jouet.

Playing There

Spring opens six miles of hiking trails, a stocked fishing pond, mountain biking, canoeing, tennis and croquet (with cocktails, naturally). Off-site, guests can golf at the nearby Woodstock Country Club. Twin Farms' spa provides hydrotherapy, body treatments and facials using Out of the Woods botanical preparations—the resort's custom line of products. Most impressive, however, is the Pub, an adult rumpus room with 24-hour open bar, 46-inch television, pool table, jukebox and Steinway piano. Come back in winter for the six private ski slopes with a snowmobile "limo" to get to the top.

Rugged Duck Harbor Campground and the Inn at Isle au Haut in Maine

A bastion of serenity off the central Maine coast, Isle au Haut is a raw crag of granite and trees. Instead of ice cream stands, art galleries or gift shops (there's only one on the island), it offers picturesque scenery and the complacency of knowing that you're more likely to encounter a pod of whales than a Best Buy. The shore is a line of naked rock lashed by wind, wave and weather. Lush spruce forest shrouds the jumbled interior, rising more than 400 feet to the island's hilly spine. Around the edges are lighthouses, lobster boats and century-old homes.

Located six miles from the mainland, Isle au Haut is accessible only by a small passenger ferry. Sixty percent of the island (2,700 acres) is national parkland, a remote portion of Acadia. The rest hosts a small, year-round community of hardy souls (population: 80). Overnight guests can choose between the outdoor splendor of remote Duck Harbor Campground and the comforts of the idyllic Inn at Isle au Haut. Either way, you'll escape the fanny-packers in nearby Bar Harbor and Mount Desert Island, where the bulk of Acadia is located. More than 3 million people descend annually on the park and surrounding Bar Harbor. Isle au Haut, on the other hand, receives only 10,000 visitors a year.

Getting There

Access is by passenger ferry (207-367-6516, isleauhaut.com), which departs from Stonington several times daily during the summer. It stops year-round at the town landing; from mid-June to early September it also travels to Duck Harbor Monday–Saturday. Round-trip fare is $34.

Staying There

Duck Harbor Campground is located on the southwest corner of the island, several miles from town. It features five sites ($25), each with a lean-to that can accommodate a maximum of six people. Advance reservations are essential and can only be made by mail. In town, the charming Inn at Isle au Haut sits at the water's edge and offers four rooms ($275–$350 including meals). A handful of houses are also available for rent on the island.

Eating There

Other than a small general store, the town offers little in the way of dining options. Black Dinah Chocolatiers (207-335-5010, blackdinahchocolatiers.com), near the park's northern edge, is a sweet exception. At the Inn at Isle au Haut, local seafood features prominently on the menu, with dishes like homemade lobster ravioli and crab-and-spinach frittata.

Playing There

A series of small roads connects the community, ideal for exploration by bicycle; rentals are available from the ferry company. Eighteen miles of hiking trails weave among the national park portion of the island. They're only open to hiking boots. Experienced paddlers can rent sea kayaks on the mainland from Stonington's Old Quarry Adventures (207-367-8977, oldquarry.com), which also offers a guided day trip to the island (about $150 per person).

Ritzy Charlotte Inn in Edgartown, Martha's Vineyard

Martha's Vineyard isn't exactly a secret destination. You can hardly take the ferry without bumping into your neighbor from the Back Bay. But if the island seems the furthest thing from an exclusive getaway, you've just been staying in the wrong place.

Allow us to introduce you to the Charlotte Inn. Located off a small side street, the inn is a bed-and-breakfast on high-society steroids, with the requisite horse paintings and groomed gardens. Though only half a block from downtown Edgartown, the fenced-in property provides an easy escape from the Vineyard's bustling summer scene. Built in 1864, the whole operation feels like an elegant throwback. The cable is basic. The cell phone use is restricted. The experience, however, is first-class.

Getting There

The Steamship Authority (508-477-8600, steamshipauthority.com) offers 14 ferries daily between Woods Hole (about an hour-and-a-half drive from Boston) and Vineyard Haven. The 45-minute ride ($7 for a one-way trip) offers Wi-Fi, a snack bar and beverages (alcoholic and otherwise). Added bonus: You can bring your car ($40–$75, April–October). Ferries also depart from Falmouth (508-548-4800, islandqueen.com), Hyannis (800-492-8082, hy-linecruises.com) and New Bedford (866-683-3779, nefastferry.com). Bikes and mopeds are a great way to get around the island; just follow the rental signs.

Staying There

Entering Charlotte Inn's main house feels like wandering onto the set of Clue. Countless (and beautiful) pieces of original art hang on the walls, leather-bound volumes adorn tables and mahogany fills the place. At the front desk, you're checked into "the book" (the inn doesn't use a computer system) and led to one of 25 individually designed rooms ($295–$950). Highly recommended, No. 3—a suite on the top floor of the carriage house out back—features a working fireplace in the living area, a king-sized bed, a walk-in closet and French doors overlooking the gardens. The bathroom not only boasts Bulgari products and an awesomely powerful shower head, but has a cool vintage design that makes you feel like shaving with a straight razor before dinner.

Eating There

Located in the main house, Catch on the Terrace maintains the standard set by the living quarters, thanks to the combination of a fourth-generation fly-fisherman (chef Chris Parsons) and the Vineyard (where fresh tuna is only three minutes away). Parsons offers three-course prix-fixe ($68 per person) and five-course market menus nightly during the summer months and on weekends during the off-season. The French-inspired cuisine includes dishes like pan-seared Maine scallops with olive oil–poached heirloom tomatoes, grilled baby fennel, lemon risotto and fresh coriander seeds. There's also an extensive wine list from maitre d'hotel Richard Jardin. Other nearby dining options include Alchemy (508-627-9999) for oysters, David Ryan's Restaurant (508-627-4100, davidryans.com) for the just-as-amazing-as-it-sounds fried hot dog and Main Street Diner (508-627-9337) for laid-back breakfast with the locals.

Playing There

If you need a break from eating, drinking and making catty comments about island fashion, there are plenty of activities to keep you occupied. In Oak Bluffs, Martha's Vineyard Ocean Sports (508-693-8476, mvoceansports.com) offers jet ski and boat rentals, as well as water skiing and parasailing rides. Paddlers can head to Island Spirit Kayak Adventures (508-693-9727, islandspirit.com), also in Oak Bluffs; cyclists to Trike Panther Travel Adventures (617-848-9060, pinktrike.com), back in Edgartown; and equestrians to Red Pony Farms (508-693-3788), over in West Tisbury. Reward yourself with a beer at the Wharf (508-627-9966, wharfpub.com), destination of choice for 20-somethings, or a mojito at Alchemy (508-627-9999), destination of choice for everyone else.

Rugged Tiamo Resort in the Bahamas

Tiamo is an earthy work of idealism. An Eden shaped from elbow grease. As described by a cabdriver on South Andros Island's one main road, "Not for me. No cars. No noise. No radio. No TV." In other words, a complete escape. Tiamo is run by Hoosier Mike Hartman, 38. Thirteen years ago, Hartman decided to create "a simple place on a beautiful island that would be comfortable and appealing where you ate well, drank well, slept well and had fun." The goal wasn't to become a renowned eco-resort, but the accolades have come, including a 2007 "World Saver" award from Condé Nast Traveler.

On an isolated strip of beach, the 11 beachside bungalows, along with lodge and employee quarters, were constructed with every consideration for waste, sustainability and impact. What's surprising is that you hardly notice. Tiamo provides all the comforts of a starred destination, just with composting toilets. Perhaps most important is the absence of the tired "island time" cliché. Forget the hour; at Tiamo, people can't tell you what day it is.

Getting There

There are weekend escapes, and then there's a T ride, two planes, a cab and a boat to a bight on a sparsely inhabited island. There are no phones, no Internet, no roads. Tiamo is a great place to escape from the law, let alone the rat race. Despite all the variables, the trip is just under eight hours door-to-door. After flying a national carrier like JetBlue to Nassau, use a puddle jumper from Western Air ($140, round-trip) to Congo Town or Mangrove Cay. Tiamo provides complimentary transport from there.

Staying There

Guests stay in private beachside bungalows ($415, single occupancy). Waking means ocean breezes and sand beneath your feet. Open showers have wide overhead spigots that pour the resort's filtered and purified well water. Solar panels provide more than enough heat. Minus a nap or two, there aren't a whole lot of reasons to return to your bungalow before bedtime, at which point a city dweller might find the silence deafening. Careful how you fill the time, though. Sound travels, and you might find yourself greeted with applause at the next communal meal.

Eating There

Food is part of the package and includes hot breakfasts and lunches like mahi sandwiches. The real culinary recreation, however, begins at the 6:30 happy hour. Guests and staff, who grow incredibly social in their shared isolation, converse over hors d'oeuvres and rum punches while calypso music plays. At 7:30, the chef arrives to present the night's menu, always absent of endangered local seafood like conch or grouper. The dinners begin light—an avocado gazpacho perhaps—before moving to more filling fare like sesame-crusted ahi tuna or jerk rack of lamb.

Playing There

No stay at Tiamo would be complete without a tour of the grounds with the nature concierge team. There are tri-marans and kayaks available, and at least once a day a snorkel trip. Anglers come from far and wide to catch and release bonefish. Of course, you can just grab a book from the library, hang in a seaside hammock under the trees and do glorious, liberating nothing.

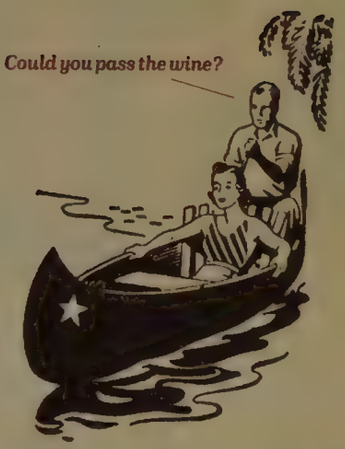
Ritzy Elbow Beach in Bermuda

It takes about two hours to drive to the Cape in weekend traffic. Why not jet to Bermuda? A nonstop flight from Logan to the small island off the coast of South Carolina hardly lasts long enough to get through the latest New Yorker. There's endless time for reading on the private strand of pink sand at Elbow Beach, managed by Mandarin Oriental. Elbow Beach is the Caribbean equivalent of the Catskills resort in Dirty Dancing, where the well-to-do flock for family summer camp. Expect mothers and daughters in matching Lilly Pulitzer, newlyweds in practically matching J.Crew. It's not as uptight as it sounds (heartening, really), especially after downing a complimentary cocktail at the lobby bar.

Or you can skip the drink and head straight for afternoon tea. If you don't think scones and swimming mix, just remember this is a British territory, more blazer than bikini. Like the island as a whole, Elbow Beach appears perfectly manicured and maintained (civic pride must be in the rum). A four-story, buttercream building crowns the 50-acre property, which slopes down to the sea, providing turquoise views to sustain a tourism industry. Pastel-colored cottages dot the lush grounds, which also boast a spa and several restaurants. Located in Paget Parish, five miles from Hamilton, city life is just a taxi ride away. But really, there's no need to leave.



Getting There

Several airlines, including Delta, JetBlue and US Airways, fly nonstop from Logan to Bermuda International Airport, which can feel like a preppy reunion when the boarding school crowd comes and goes. Visitors can't rent cars, but a $30, 30-minute taxi ride deposits you at Elbow Beach. Once there, buses, ferries and taxis run to downtown Hamilton and other destinations. Bikes and mopeds are available, but not the easiest to maneuver on the narrow, winding streets, where cars drive on the left side of the road.

Staying There

Built in 1908, Elbow Beach has improved with age—or more specifically, the 2000 arrival of Mandarin Oriental. The luxury brand has undertaken a major renovation of the property that's ongoing. The 131 rooms ($455 and up, May–October) in the main building haven't been finished, but no bother: Better to stay in one of the cottages with patios overlooking the Atlantic Ocean. This may be a British territory, but thankfully the accommodations have a modern island feel, with white linens, beamed ceilings, flat-screen TVs and Bose DVD sound systems. Curtains let you create a wall between the bed and seating area—and leave the sliding glass doors open to the breeze. But beware passersby: Guests cut through the grass on their way to the beach.

Eating There

The resort's dining options may not be as mind-blowing as the surroundings, but they satisfy. In any case, there's as much silver on tanned arms as on tabletops, so feel free to dress up. The most ambitious is the main building's Seahorse Grill, serving steak and fish dishes like sole with celery-root fondue, blood orange reduction and fennel shavings (two-course menu, $55; three-course, $65). Sunday brunch is also a favorite. Other choices include Sea Breeze, Lido and Mickey's Bistro, all part of a waterfront restaurant complex. Sea Breeze offers fresh sushi and small plates—a nice break from the more formal fare. Also casual, Mickey's, Bermuda's only eatery right on the beach, is fun for a familiar meal of Caesar salad ($12.75) or pepperoni pizza ($17.75)—just ask the tweens charging lunch to their parents' tabs. A similar menu can be found at the cozy Veranda Bar, which has a library vibe with leather chairs and board games. Skip Mediterranean Lido on a short visit, but make time for a traditional tea ($22.95) at the Sea Breeze Terrace, back in the main building.

Playing There

It's perfectly acceptable to pass the days lounging by the fresh-water pool and the half-mile beach—cabanas, chairs, cocktails at the ready. For the active set, there's kayaking, snorkeling and diving trips. Elbow Beach also has five tennis courts and a putting green. Mopeds and bikes can be rented on site. The spa is worth checking out—Mandarin excels in this department—with signature services like the three-hour Rum Swizzle Ritual ($480), which involves bathing while sipping on the namesake cocktail (now that's paradise). The six private suites have granite soaking tubs and pebble-lined rain showers. It's not cheap; a manicure costs $99. Free daily resort activities include volleyball matches and wine tastings.

Summer in a Day

By Ezra Dyer Photographs by Alan Gwizdowski

SUMMER IN BOSTON IS SO SHORT that it makes me neurotic. Painfully aware of the ephemeral nature of the New England season, I try to wring every drop of sunny goodness from every single day between June and September. And yet each year I reach a sad realization, sometime around the first frosty night of October: I should move to Miami. And then I have my second realization: Another summer passed without my partaking in some quintessential activity, some rite of warm-weather passage, and now I have to wait seven months for another window of opportunity.

For example, two years ago I never made it to the Cape. Not once, all summer. I'm not even sure how that's possible, living in Boston—there've been years when I've gone to the Cape simply because traffic moving in that direction was so thick that I had no choice in the matter once I left the house. The year before that, I went all summer without taking a harbor cruise. I meant to do these things, abstractly, but once the temperature goes above 70 degrees, we New Englanders get lulled into a false sense of complacency. We think that we'll accomplish things that we will not, and by July we become almost as mellow as the most high-strung Californian.

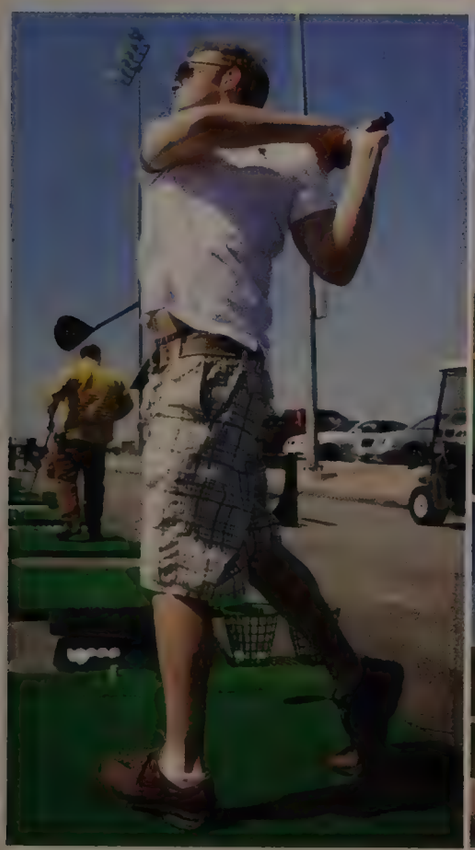
So this year, I've decided to kick summer's ass well and proper before it even starts, in April. I will accomplish everything I want to do for the rest of the season in a single day, thus removing the pressure and allowing me to more fully relish the upcoming months. This means I'll have to visit the Cape, hit the driving range, check out Marina Bay, go on a boat, sit on the beach, have a cookout, put the top down on a convertible, drink a beer on a deck and, of course, attend a Red Sox game.

You give me a short summer, New England? Well, guess what: I only need one day.

I head to the Cape first, since that sandy arm of idyllic beaches and unholy congestion is synonymous with summer.

I HEAD TO THE CAPE FIRST, since that sandy arm of idyllic beaches and unholy congestion is synonymous with summer. Despite the fact that it's a Thursday morning in April, there are snarls of traffic on Route 3 South. Well, of course there are—what would a trip to the Cape be without blood-roiling traffic jams? But as I approach the Sagamore, it's an epiphany—the rotary is gone, replaced by a flyover. I'm sure that's old hat to all you fervent Cape-goers, but it's news to me. Now all they've got to do is make Route 6 an eight-lane superhighway, and they'll have that traffic problem licked.

I drive across the bridge, take the first exit and pull into the bustling parking lot of the Christmas Tree Shops just before the bridge. OK! Wow! I'm on the Cape! I kick back and regard the Christmas Tree Shops' classy windmill, letting that patented Cape relaxation flow through my veins. I turn off my cell phone—it's no use here, old salt. Then I turn it back on because 45 seconds have gone by, and I've got other things to accomplish.



ON THE DRIVE BACK NORTH, I plan my next move and contemplate what the hell so many people were doing at the Christmas Tree Shops in April. I think it's time to work on my golf game, so I pull up to the driving range at Granite Links in Quincy. I stop by the driving range instead of actually playing golf for two reasons. First, a round of golf takes too long when you're doing summer in a day, and second, there's no way I'd make it through a summer without playing golf. It's entirely possible, however, that I'd make it though a summer without practicing. The high points of golf, for me, are drinking beers and riding around in the cart, both of which are frowned upon at the driving range.

I order a bucket of balls and begin firing away. Good to see that my slice made it through the winter intact. I guess it was just hibernating. Halfway through the bucket, I'm already bored with the driving range (practice doesn't make perfect—perfect practice makes perfect), but I'm on a mission. I shall drive each one of these balls far to the right, until the bucket is empty, thus fulfilling my summer's quota of slices. It's warm enough that I go short-sleeves, although, unlike on some of my actual golf outings, I refrain from going skins.

Marina Bay's a poor man's Cape. You've got a boardwalk. You've got outdoor bars and restaurants on the water. You've got boats.

THEN IT'S BACK IN THE CAR AND UP THE COAST A FEW MILES to Marina Bay. I'm a huge proponent of Marina Bay. If you've got a car and you live in Boston, it takes maybe 15 minutes to get there and it's a poor man's Cape. You've got a boardwalk. You've got outdoor bars and restaurants on the water. You've got boats. I went there for the first time last summer and became a convert. But one place I haven't been is the semi-notorious Marina Bay Beach Club (formerly WaterWorks).

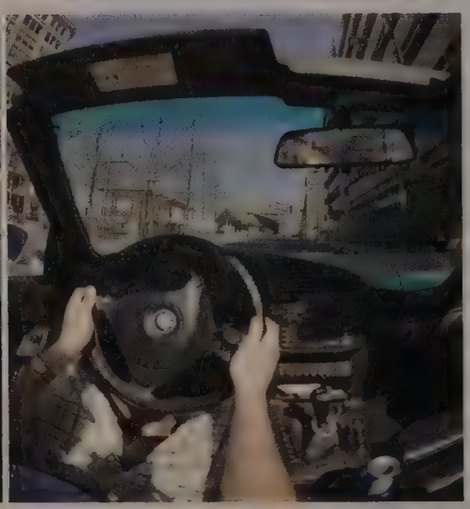
It looks like I'll have to wait a while longer on that front. Quincy's answer to South Beach (or perhaps the Jersey Shore) isn't open yet, and I don't think that peering through a locked gate really counts. So I head over to the docks to see if I can check another item off my list: going on a boat.

"But Ezra," you say, "don't you own a boat yourself?" Yes. And shut up. Mine's still in my parents' driveway awaiting de-winterization, so I'll have to see if some more ambitious fellow is already on the water and not minding his vessel. I'm in luck. Straight down the dock are two center-consoles bearing the Milton Academy logo. Check out those ambitious kids, getting their boats in the water in April. Exactly why Milton Academy needs a center-console with a 250-horsepower Yamaha is a good question (is there a class on fishin'?), but it isn't one for me to contemplate now. I step aboard one of the boats, take a look around to see if anyone's going to yell at me and jump back onto the dock. Look at me—April and I've already been boating.

ALL THAT EFFORT ON THE WATER TIRES ME OUT, so it's time to rest my weary bones by the shore. I drive back to Southie and plop myself down on a choice patch of sand on M Street. Not surprisingly, it isn't very crowded. I guess not everybody loves going to the beach as much as I do. To ensure the base on my tan develops evenly, I apply a smooth coating of Banana Boat 30. By August, I'll be a beige god.

My problem with beaches is that after two minutes or so, I get bored. Fortunately, today I only have two minutes, so it's into the car and onto my next activity: grilling. Back at my place, I pull the cover off the Weber and crank the burners up all the way to cook off the remains of last fall's final cookout. What did we have then? It was messy, whatever it was. Ten minutes later, I'm eating a chicken sausage only slightly slower than Kobayashi at the Nathan's competition. It's a good thing these are pre-cooked, because I'm on a tight schedule.

By August, I'll be a beige god.

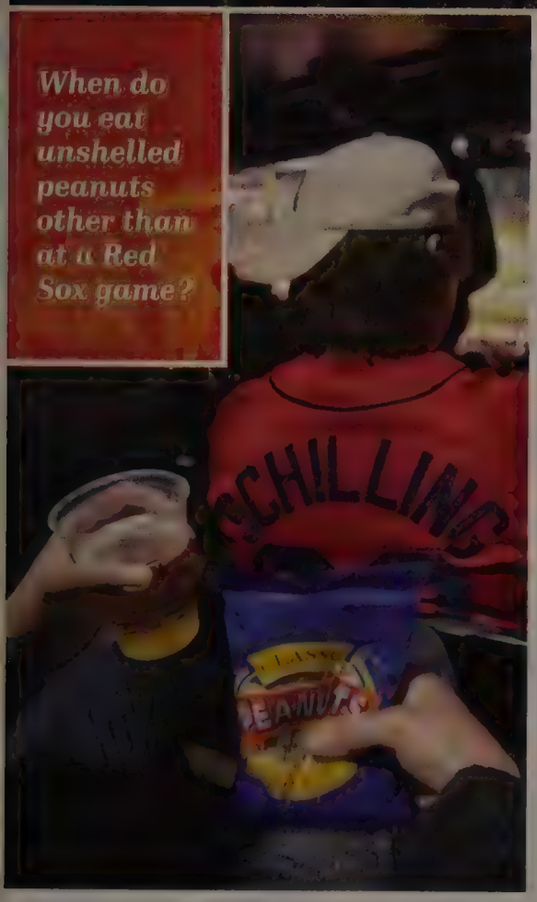


GRILLING COMPLETE, IT'S DOWN TO THE STREET and into my car. It's a convertible with snow tires, an appropriately emblematic Boston vehicle that represents the schism between optimism ("Five days a year, it'll be nice enough to put the top down!") and reality ("I'm not gonna take these snow tires off until the end of April, because you never know..."). The top hasn't been down since the Red Sox were in the playoffs, but it obligingly flips back and folds into the trunk with nary a complaint, and I'm rolling like it's August.

This is the nicest day we've had so far this year, and literally every other convertible on the road has the top down. Have you ever noticed, when you're in Florida or California, that the majority of the convertibles have their tops up on what we would consider beautiful days? That doesn't happen in Boston. On one particularly nice day in January this year (I think it was 50 degrees), I saw a guy driving a Thunderbird, top down. He was wearing a winter hat.

I ROLL WITH THE RAGTOP DOWN SO MY HAIR CAN BLOW ALL the way to the waterfront, where I've got a date with a Bud Light on the Sail Loft deck. Until Fan Pier materializes into something other than a work site, the Sail Loft is, strangely, one of the few places in this oceanfront city where you can actually have a beer next to the ocean. It's as if, when they were building up the waterfront, nobody raised their hand and said, "Hey, you know what? I've got an idea. Call me crazy, but maybe we should put a few bars and restaurants on the water. Other places do that, and it seems to be quite a popular practice." And then someone else said, "Well then, where will we put all the monolithic condo buildings, giant hotels and the nine-acre courthouse?" And so I end up having my beer on the precious patch of Sail Loft deck, which is so tiny that I feel slightly uncomfortable sharing it with two other people. Sort of the same feeling I get in elevators.

When do you eat unshelled peanuts other than at a Red Sox game?



BUT I'M HAVING A BEER OUTSIDE ON THE WATER ON A WARM DAY, and all is right with the world. After stopping by Tia's too (it opened the patio early to take advantage of the afterwork warm-day mania), I have only one more quest to round out my summer spring: a visit to Fenway. Sometimes you go to a Red Sox game in April and the weather makes you wish you wore the full Helly Hansen Deadliest Catch Bering Sea outfit. But not tonight. It's balmy, there's little wind and Manny, for one, seems to love it. He fights to a full count, fouls off two pitches, then crushes a double to the gap to drive in two runs. The crowd goes absolutely bonkers. Everyone's psyched. Even the PA guy's bringing his A-game, playing Franz Ferdinand's "Take Me Out" when the Tigers yank their beleaguered pitcher. I eat peanuts, which, it occurs to me, is possibly another thing I can cross off my summer to-do list. Because when do you eat unshelled peanuts other than at a Red Sox game?

I bail out in the eighth inning when it becomes clear the Red Sox have the game in hand (final score: 12-6). I know from hard-earned experience that if I don't leave now and find a cab, I'll basically be walking back to Southie.

As it is, I walk to Mass. Ave. before I get a taxi, and on the way I contemplate my accomplishments. Red Sox, beach, Cape, cookout—I daresay I've experienced the most productive summer day ever to occur in April in Boston. Now I can relax, because when it comes to summer, I've already been there and done that.

Well, except for playing golf for real. And going to the Harbor Islands. And there's a Poison concert at the Bank of America Pavilion in August. And, of course, I couldn't visit the Colonnade rooftop pool, because it doesn't open until Memorial Day. I've still never set foot on Nantucket.

Well played, New England summer. Perhaps you can't be conquered in a single day. But mark my words: Soon enough, my pasty legs will once again be unencumbered by long pants, and wraiths of smoke from my grill will blot the very sky when I inevitably overcook the year's first corn on the cob. Soon enough, languid days will fade to balmy nights. But even then, I won't forget that I have work left unfinished. ×××

In Good Taste

At T.W. Food, Bronwyn Wiechmann's style is as unique as the cooking.

BY Amanda Knorr PHOTOGRAPHS BY Michael Piazza

STAYING AHEAD OF THE CURVE MATTERS EQUALLY IN THE FASHION and restaurant worlds. Thirty-year-old Bronwyn Wiechmann, proprietress of trendsetting T.W. Food, has the recipe down for both.

"You're walking into [an approximation of] my dining room," explains Wiechmann, whose husband, Tim, mans the kitchen. "I like my wardrobe to portray the fact that I'm the hostess of a party." Instead of aprons, ties and clogs, she mixes clothes that "transcend time" with modern dresses. "You have to stay ahead of the trends. Otherwise there's going to be another restaurant doing something cooler," she says. "You want to keep things fresh and cool and give people new things to look at." On and off the plate.

Describe your work attire.
I look for unique dress designs that would very subtly say a lot without needing to have a loud pattern. Then it doesn't detract from the food and ambience.

You have a lot of black dresses. Any reason?
I opened the restaurant wearing black, and it was the best way to give it a very congruent feel. I didn't want to [stand out] from my waitstaff, and I wanted it to be about the food. For the spring I'm definitely going to wear a lot more beige tones. But don't hold me to it!

What does the waitstaff wear?
[They] wear all black, but they wear cute dresses they're comfortable in and can accent with color. They buy dresses coming from their own personalities. They're not just a tool to get a job done, but they provide a personalized approach to each table.

Favorite pieces in your wardrobe?
I love my little brown skirt that I just re-elasticized that [my mom] bought from Chanel. It's like an upside-down umbrella. And in terms of new design, I love Marimekko.

"You have to stay ahead of the trends. Otherwise there's going to be another restaurant doing something cooler."

What do you wear out to dinner?
I like to bring color in. I went out two weekends ago when we were closed and wore a nice silk Asian kimono that was bright green. I definitely wear something that I don't wear on the floor, because what I'm wearing right now will become a "work outfit."

Where do you bargain hunt?
Zara and H&M.

What about couture?
We can't have everything that we want; that's what makes these pieces so special. So when you get [them] and they cost a lot, you're buying a piece of art. That's how I look at it. ×××

IMPROVISED MOVE

A man walks into a bar and orders a drink. Except he's actually Oscar Wilde. And the bartender has Tourette's. And they're in love. With a rainbow trout. Hectic, ad-libbed comedy has long been a staple at Cambridge's ImprovBoston, which has just moved out of its antique digs and into a new, upmarket space in Central Square (a former Asian grocery store). Managing director Elyse Schuerman explains, "You can bring your kids on Saturdays for family entertainment or show up on the first Wednesday of the month for the Naked Comedy Show. We're that diverse!"

Vanishing Act

Now You See It

A JK Rowling book isn't the only place to find magic these days. Look no further than Boston's Opera House, where David Copperfield performs astounding tricks and illusions May 9–11. Amidst decades of TV specials and tours, Copperfield has walked through the Great Wall of China and made the Statue of Liberty disappear. If only he could do the same with Spygate.

Movies Edited by Nick Altschuller and Amanda Knorr

The Bank Job ★★ ½ A cheeky screenplay by Dick Clement and Ian La Frenais gets a disappointing, meat-and-potatoes treatment from journeyman director Roger Donaldson in this purportedly true tale of layabout London blokes robbing a bank's safety deposit vault, circa 1971. Little do our heroes realize that they're being played by MI5, as shifty secret agents are aiming to recover incriminating photos of Princess Margaret at a Trinidadian orgy and set up Jason Statham and his small-time crew to take the fall. It's a goofy tall tale with plenty of nifty twists and turns, but the film sticks stubbornly to standard heist-movie conventions, never quite cutting loose enough to embrace the story's more ridiculous aspects. Statham seems miscast, too hard and hairy to be playing such a hapless fall guy. You'll spend most of the time waiting for him to beat the stuffing out of somebody. Amusing but lacking personality, The Bank Job cries out for the insouciant fizz Steven Soderbergh brought to his Danny Ocean capers. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Chicago 10 ★★★ ½ Rude, boisterous and thrilling, Brett Morgen's well-assembled documentary shouldn't be confused with any of those scolding history lessons baby boomers often produce to salute themselves as the greatest generation. Exploding notions of hippy-dippy nostalgia with a soundtrack of Rage Against the Machine, Eminem and Black Sabbath, the movie alternates between footage of the 1968 Democratic National Convention riots and animated court transcripts of the farcical trial that followed. Morgen, who previously helmed the delightful Robert Evans biography The Kid Stays in the Picture, instills the film with a modern sense of urgency. Chicago 10 avoids talking heads and traditional doc devices in favor of a headlong immersion in the events. The courtroom hijinks are highlighted by hilarious vocal performances from Nick Nolte, as a Dubya–look-alike prosecutor, and the late Roy Scheider, as the judge who preached freedom of speech while simultaneously ordering Black Panther Bobby Seale to be gagged by bailiffs. (At Coolidge Corner.)

88 Minutes ★ ½ First off, they're lying. It's more like 108 minutes, which is far too much time to watch Al Pacino panting and groaning his way through such disposable serial-killer schlock. Directed with staggering incompetence by Fried Green Tomatoes helmer Jon Avnet, the film has been sitting on a shelf for a couple years, but feels even older. Gary Scott Thompson's screenplay rips off every moldy Thomas Harris/Joe Ezsterhas trope imaginable, surrounding Pacino's womanizing forensic psychiatrist with a bevy of babes (Amy Brenneman, Alicia Witt, Deborah Kara Unger and Leelee Sobieski) who may or may not be helping a mad killer (Neal McDonagh) orchestrate his murder from Death Row. The majority of the movie is Pacino talking on the phone while trying to untangle the plot, so the only entertainment is watching him strain to make the nonsense credible with patented Pacino-isms like big hair, bug eyes and a lot of manic gum chewing. He's too old for the role and too good for this movie. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Leatherheads ★★ ½ George Clooney has figured out how to stay old-school in a business that's always chasing the newest trends. How else to explain this defiantly retro football farce loaded with affectionate nods to everything from It Happened One Night to The Keystone Kops? Who else beside Clooney could make such a thing happen? No, the movie doesn't really work, but its heart is in the right place. You find yourself leaning forward, rooting for scenes to succeed even as they fizzle out. Aping the rat-a-tat dialogue rhythms of His Girl Friday, Clooney (who also produced and directed) bats zingers back and forth with Renée Zellweger's lady reporter at breakneck speed. They're more than capable of firing off the tongue-twisters, but everything gets gummed up in the editing. Clooney's aspiring to the screwball tone of '30s comedy, but the film has been cut at a much slower, more modern pace. Unfortunately, there's too much air between the lines to build any momentum. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Life Before Her Eyes ★ More ghoulish misery porn from director Vadim Perelman, whose similarly highfalutin', oppressive House of Sand and Fog was one of the more unintentionally hilarious dramas in recent years. Based on a novel by Laura Kasiskchke, this pile of soft-focus suffering stars Uma Thurman as a whimpering survivor of a Columbine-style massacre, sniffling her way through the event's 15th anniversary. Clumsy flashbacks follow Thurman's tarty younger self (Evan Rachel Wood) in a few teenybopper misadventures with her

FULL-FRONTAL FUNNY

Another member of the Apatow stable heads a winning comedy.

Forgetting Sarah Marshall
Starring Jason Segel, Kristen Bell, Mila Kunis, Russell Brand, Paul Rudd and Jack McBrayer. Written by Jason Segel. Directed by Nicholas Stoller. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

Glen Wilson

IT WOULD BE A LOT EASIER for Peter to forget Sarah Marshall if he didn't keep seeing her everywhere.

But I guess that's what happens when you've just been dumped by a famous TV star. Sarah (Kristen Bell) headlines one of those inexplicably high-rated forensics investigation shows (the kind where the male lead says cheesy one-liners and fiddles with his sunglasses all the time). So everywhere poor Peter turns, his ex's smiling face is there to greet him on billboards, tabloids, reruns and Access Hollywood. Desperate, the chronically weeping sad sack runs away to a resort in Hawaii, where he finds himself staying next to—Sarah. Oh, and her new boyfriend.

It's a nifty hook for this filthy, winning comedy, the latest from producer Judd Apatow's seemingly inexhaustible well of relatable, schlubby guys, impossibly hot women and embarrassing sexual shenanigans. With The 40-Year-Old Virgin, Knocked Up, Superbad and now Forgetting Sarah Marshall, Apatow has ingeniously rescued the modern romantic comedy from the chick-flick's vile clutches and proved it's still possible to produce a sensitive, touching love story these days. Just throw in a ton of outrageous penis and pot jokes, so dudes won't feel guilty about digging them.

Jason Segel, who also penned the screenplay, stars as Peter. TV fans might know him as the adorable sidekick from Apatow's seminal, short-lived series Freaks and Geeks, or as the adorable sidekick on his current show How I Met Your Mother. Segel's got an interesting screen presence, something like the second coming of Judge Reinhold. He's a good deal taller and a bit doughier than most leading men, but he approaches every scene with a wide-eyed enthusiasm. His specialty is an absence of snark—delivering lines with an absolute sincerity that becomes hilarious in its ardor.

There's been a lot of ink spilled about these Apatow pictures and how the funny, unconventional-looking Jewish dudes always end up scoring stunning shiksa goddesses. This seems like a new phenomenon, unless you've ever seen a Woody Allen movie. In fact, I'd wager that the entire history of comedy began with men trying to win over women who are out of their league.

Glen Wilson

In any event, Segel's peculiar, endearing earnestness is what allows Forgetting Sarah Marshall to get away with being the dirtiest movie in theaters. There hasn't been anything so raunchy since Superbad. Yet for all the full-frontal male nudity and talk about the mysteries of the female anatomy, you'll never forget this is the sweet story of a broken heart, as Peter bumbles his way along the beach and sobs so loudly that the hotel receives complaints about a crying woman in his suite.

In keeping with Apatow's strengths, the movie serves as an empowerment fantasy for couch potatoes. Not only is the hotel's concierge (Mila Kunis) ridiculously gorgeous and unattached, she also takes an instant liking to our weepy hero and believes in his dream of writing a puppet rock opera about Dracula.

The smartest thing about Segel's script is its spirit of generosity. This resort is packed with colorful characters, each with plenty of screen time to play off one another in unexpected ways. There's Paul Rudd's stoned surfing instructor, so cheerfully zonked he's prone to repeating entire conversations. 30 Rock's overzealous page Jack McBrayer turns up as a woefully out-of-his league honeymooner discovering that marital relations are nothing like what he was taught in Sunday school. And it wouldn't be an Apatow production without Jonah Hill turning up to offer his patented mix of potty-mouthed bluster and latent homosexuality. Even Kristen Bell as the dreaded ex offers a couple more dimensions than one would assume.

But the true genius stroke is British comic Russell Brand's performance as Sarah's new beau, Aldous Snow. At first an annoying, over-the-top caricature of a preening pop star, Brand eventually makes his character's entitled loutishness weirdly charming. The film's funniest scenes find Peter and Aldous striking up an unlikely friendship, throwing a few curveballs into the usual rom-com formula. "Dude," Peter groans, "Why do you have to be so cool?"

Capably, if unexceptionally, directed by Nicholas Stoller—a few too many distracting blue-screens standing in for island scenery—Forgetting Sarah Marshall meanders a bit before building to a climax that offers more smiles than belly laughs. That spirit of affection is what lingers when the lights come up. It's actually a pleasure spending time with these people, which is a rare feeling at the movies these days. ✖✖✖ evangelical, goody-goody best friend (Eva Amurri) as the shadow of tasteless, glossy slaughter looms large. The shockeroo plot twist is telegraphed almost from the outset, with Perelman piling on inadvertently comic, wildly pretentious hints along the way. It's the kind of movie in which time-lapse nature photography is supposed to impart depth, with plenty of ponderous classroom speeches about ossification and evaporation drowning in sophomoric water metaphors. Not as laugh-out-loud incompetent as Sand And Fog, but still a waste of time. (At Boston Common and Waltham Embassy.)

My Blueberry Nights ★★★ Wong Kar-wai has a bit of trouble clearing the language barrier in his first American film, a sweet and sad picture starring Norah Jones as a lovesick lass on a cross-country trip through an iconic nocturnal landscape that looks like an Edward Hopper painting come to life. Closer in spirit to Wong's earlier, goofier Chungking Express than his recent masterpieces In The Mood For Love and 2046, Blueberry Nights is episodic and erratic, but always visually luscious. Photographed by the great Darius Khondji in an array of shadows and neon, it's an aesthetic feast, with Wong using his patented skip-frame, slo-mo atmospherics, oft-repeated snippets of pop songs and an enveloping vibe of heartache. Jones is adequate in a role that requires little, but Jude Law rediscovers his long-lost charm as the object of her affection. The screenplay, by Wong and mystery novelist Lawrence Block, doesn't amount to much, but the filmmaking is so mesmerizing that it hardly matters. (At Boston Common, Harvard Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Persepolis ★★★½ Buoyant and irreverent, Marjane Satrapi's best-selling coming-of-age comic book memoir springs to life as the simplicity of black-and-white line drawings trump the computer-generated marvels we've grown accustomed to. Growing up as an outspoken female in Iran sounds like the formula for a movie far less lively, but the tone boasts a sardonic wit matching that of its spitfire heroine. (No surprise then that Satrapi directed the film along with French animator Vincent Paronnaud.) Her childhood memories of the Shah's fall and the subsequent rise of Islamic fundamentalism offer a refreshing, humanistic point of view on Middle Eastern history. Young Satrapi's punk-rock attitude and black-market Iron Maiden cassettes lead to a brief exile in Vienna before she returns and, quite movingly, attempts to assimilate into a culture where she's no longer welcome. Persepolis is funny, rambling and sad, and a welcome reminder that stubborn individualism can be found where we least expect it. (At Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

Shine a Light ★★★ What was once rebellious eventually becomes part of the establishment. This isn't a slight, just a simple fact of life, and it's one that Martin Scorsese seems to have grown comfortable with, judging from his exuberant, if inessential, Rolling Stones concert documentary. Having enlisted an army of the world's most formidable cinematographers, including Children of Men's Emmanuel Lubeszki, There Will Be Blood's Robert Elswit and even Gimme Shelter's Albert Maysles, Scorsese has 17 cameras trained closely on the action. Shot over two nights at New York's Beacon Theatre in the fall of 2006, the concert is a mixed bag. "Jumpin' Jack Flash," "Satisfaction" and especially that tedious Microsoft anthem, "Start Me Up," are rote at best. But Shine a Light discovers magic in lesser-known tracks from Exile on Main St. and Some Girls, often capturing intimate onstage moments as Mick and the boys seem to truly enjoy playing the numbers they aren't forced to perform every damn night. (At Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Phillip Caruso

Whine and Cheese

Wise to Pass on Eyes

Uma Thurman and Brett Cullen star in Vadim Perelman's The Life Before Her Eyes.

Stop-Loss ★★ ½ A benevolent muddle, writer-director Kimberly Pierce's long-awaited follow-up to 1999's Boys Don't Cry stars Ryan Phillippe as a decorated soldier who, upon returning home to Texas, discovers he's been back-door drafted into serving another tour in Iraq. Kudos to Pierce and company for attempting to portray the often shameful treatment of our men and women in uniform, but once Phillippe goes AWOL and hits the road with his best friend's girl (Abbie Cornish), the movie alternates awkwardly between gritty verisimilitude and tacky Hollywood plot twists. Pierce has a genuine feel for the rhythms and details of small-town life and draws strong performances from Phillippe, Channing Tatum and especially Joseph Gordon-Levitt as battle-weary young grunts. But the melodramatic framework too often begs for credulity—with stock characters like Timothy Olyphant's moustache-twirling Army honcho and Josef Sommer's sinister senator undercutting the realism of the movie's better scenes. The screenplay (by Pierce and Mark Richard) feels as if it's been worked over by a committee. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Street Kings ★★ With angst-ridden, alcoholic peace officers surrounded by sleaze and systematic corruption, David Ayer's slick, egregiously miscast sophomore directorial effort will be old hat to anyone who's ever stayed up tearing through a James Ellroy paperback. It'll feel even more familiar to anybody who saw Ellroy and Ayer's 2003 collaboration, Dark Blue, as Street Kings offers the exact same storyline. But where the previous picture featured Kurt Russell's career performance as a crooked cop growing a conscience, the latest spin puts Keanu Reeves in his place—hardly a fair trade. Ayer penned Training Day, helmed the unpleasant Christian Bale dud Harsh Times and obviously enjoys wallowing in knuckleheaded machismo without having anything particularly interesting or relevant to say about it. The déjà vu isn't helped by flat staging, claustrophobic compositions and numerous scenes in which everyone stands around explaining the plot when they should just be shooting each other. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

21 ★ ½ The local legend about the MIT students who made a fortune counting cards gets the glossy big-screen treatment. Across the Universe's simpering Jim Sturgess stars as a gullible math whiz named Ben Campbell (Jeff Ma in real life; gee, I wonder why they changed that?) who's seduced by his slick professor (Kevin Spacey) into spending weekends bringing down the house in Sin City. Screenwriters Peter Steinfeld and Allan Loeb employ every tired cliché, and romantic comedy director Robert Luketic keeps the pace moving at such a crawl that you're always half an hour ahead of the characters. Sturgess is an empty vessel, conjuring zero chemistry with love interest Kate Bosworth. Spacey phones in his tired snide scoundrel routine, while Laurence Fishburne hams it up as a casino security expert. Shot in hi-def video, the movie often appears smeared and out of focus, neon lights blurring together like the indistinct characters. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Vantage Point ★ ½ What happens when you watch a crummy 24 knock-off from a bunch of different angles? It turns out to be the same stupid movie over and over again. Written by first-timer Barry Levy with all the hopped-up gusto of a freshman film, this laughably unconvincing thriller follows a presidential assassination attempt in the crowded city square of Salamanca, Spain. The gimmick here is that the movie keeps stopping, rewinding and starting all over again from different locations featuring the hammy stylings of a different B-list actor. Dennis Quaid appears grim and constipated as a jittery secret service agent, while Forest Whitaker hyperventilates as a tourist who saw too much through his video camera. Director Pete Travis' debut has nothing to say about shifting perspectives as the temporal hiccups and shifting points of view are simply expository and only serve to jerk the audience around. (At Chestnut Hill and in the suburbs.)

The Visitor ★★★ ½ Wonderful character actor Richard Jenkins finally gets a chance to shine as a leading man in writer-director Tom McCarthy's warm, beautifully understated New York story. Jenkins stars as a gruff, emotionally constipated college professor who strikes up an unlikely friendship with a Syrian immigrant (Haaz Sleiman) and begins to reconnect with his better self, finally venturing out in bustling Greenwich Village and even learning how to play the African drum. As in his delightful debut film, The Station Agent, McCarthy demonstrates a rare gift for observing behavior, allowing his characters to grow and letting their silences speak volumes. But just when you're settling in for yet another "white guy learns a lesson from minorities" homily, the film takes a sharp left turn into darker waters. Without getting preachy, the movie paints a vivid portrait of a post-9/11 America governed by confusion and fear. McCarthy never pushes the material, shrewdly understanding that Jenkins' sad eyes can tell the whole story. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Where in the World Is Osama Bin Laden? ★ In what's easily the worst film released so far this year, master-of-the-obvious Morgan Spurlock reacts to his wife's pregnancy the way any sensible man would—by wandering around the Middle East trying to find Osama Bin Laden. This self-promoting huckster who, in his inexplicable 2004 hit Super Size Me, was shocked to learn that stuffing your face with McDonald's three meals a day until you vomit is detrimental to your health, here discovers that not every Arab is a terrorist. Some of them even have families and jobs, just like you and me! The level of condescension on display is staggering, as the filmmaker clearly assumes his audience is brain-damaged and thus delivers insufferable, earnest homilies into the lens at numbingly regular intervals. He then cuts to goofy video-game graphics of himself fighting Osama and laughs loudly at his own jokes. Structureless, witless and devoid of anything remotely resembling journalism, this is narcissism run amok. (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

The Black Keys play the Orpheum Theatre May 17.

POTENT PAIRING

The Black Keys broaden their palette with help from Danger Mouse.

James Carney

IF YOU'RE A RAW, BLUESY DUO recording with only guitar and drums in your basement in Akron, Ohio, it's fair to say that rock stardom is not high among your expectations. But after making four acclaimed albums under primitive conditions (including in an abandoned rubber factory), the Black Keys have opened a new door with Attack & Release, which debuted at No. 14 on the Billboard album chart.

"My head just got blown apart when I saw our record charted," says drummer Patrick Carney, who began recording four-track songs in high school with singer-guitarist Dan Auerbach. "We always felt like underdogs."

Carney, reached in Denver on the road to a May 17 show at the Orpheum, adds, "It isn't that long ago that I remember being just 17 years old, jamming with Dan and making really crappy recordings. Never in my entire life did I ever think that a lot of people would ever give a s about our music. Every single year, it's like another perspective gets flipped

around, whether it's the first review we ever got or charting in the Billboard Top 20."

The pair's perspective truly flipped with Attack & Release. In a series of firsts, the Keys recorded the disc in a real studio (though still in Ohio), tapped other musicians and hired a big-league producer, Brian Burton—better known as Danger Mouse, the instrumental half of Gnarls Barkley.

"We didn't record it ourselves, but we let people in that we trusted," says Carney, 28, who produced the band's previous records. "When we were starting out, we were very cautious about every single thing, and every person we dealt with, and were very skeptical. And I think we still are, but now we knew we potentially had some cool people to work with."

You can't get much cooler than Burton (the sonic architect behind Gnarls' über-hit "Crazy") or the disc's main guest players, Carney's multi-instrumentalist uncle Ralph Carney and guitarist Marc Ribot, both alumni of Tom Waits' bands. It was Burton who first contacted Auerbach and Carney to write songs for a record with R&B legend Ike Turner, who died last December. Along the way, the handful of demos they submitted were redirected to the Keys' own studio project, which Burton agreed to oversee.

Carney says that Burton didn't want to screw up the band's gritty minimalism, "but we wanted him in there to kinda do that a bit." Burton kept his fingerprints light, fleshing out the sound while adding piano, organ and synthesizer parts. The guests lent other icing, including Jethro Tull–like flute fills by Carney on one tune.

The duo itself branched out like never before. "We wanted to incorporate more instruments," says Carney, who contributed some guitar and keyboards. Auerbach also played a range of keyboards, bass, glockenspiel, lap steel and banjo, which reflects his family's love for bluegrass.

The Keys still roar on "Strange Times" and "I Got Mine," a trademark stomp where Auerbach's thick guitar riffs evoke both Zeppelin/Sabbath rock and his hero Junior Kimbrough's Mississippi hill-country blues. Yet the latter song breaks down with ghostly female harmonies, a subtle contrast that pervades much of the disc. "Remember When" is evenly split into polar-opposite versions, a spacey stroll sequenced back-to-back with the tune's original thrash-tempo rip.

With Burton, Carney says, "We would demo in the studio, then he would say, 'Let's cut the tempo in half, and instead of guitar, why don't you play the bass first?' basically trying to rearrange our way of thinking in order to come up with something different."

Just don't expect the Black Keys to rearrange their live act. "I never felt like we needed more musicians onstage," the drummer says. "These songs were conceived with just drums and guitar, so they're easy for us to put back into that." For one song, however, Auerbach plays a Fender Rhodes piano. "It's mine," Carney says. "I got it for $200, and now half the keys aren't working."

This is one band that doesn't need all the keys to rock. ×××

Indie Institutions

Jimmy Own World For a band that started in the low-rent indie-music scene in Tempe, Ariz., back in 1993, Jimmy Eat World have lived the American dream. After six studio albums that helped inch them up the rock-star ladder, the ever-emo quartet finally arrived at MTV glory with their single "The Middle." Promoting their latest album, Chase This Light, Jimmy are likely to play new tunes like "Big Casino" (an especially poignant song for Deval Patrick) as well as crowd-surfer hits like "Lucky Denver Mint." They bring their act to the Tsongas Arena in Lowell on April 30. Amy Gromek

Back For Another Season!

taste ~ collect ~ enjoy

Last season, the debut of Charity Wines throughout New England raised $320,505 for charity. Again this Spring, 100% of athlete's proceeds will support charities meaningful to them. Toast to another championship season of helping your favorite star's worthy cause.

Special thanks to The Improper Bostonian

A portion of the proceeds from Longball Cellars also goes to support the Major League Baseball Players Trust.

Mix It Up

Culture Clash

Modern mainstays such as iPods and hip-hop are united with traditional Native American iconography in Remix at the Peabody Museum of Archaeology and Ethnology through August. The exhibition enlists the visual and musical talents of Native American artists including Bunky Echo-Hawk, Ryan Red Corn and rapper Quese IMC to bridge the gap between their roots and popular culture. Although the show may lack a turn table and a synthesizer, it produces a remix worth sampling.

John Buckingham

Imaginationland

Through the Looking Glass

The realms of the fantastic and the mundane collide in this literary exploration of human consciousness. Jack O'Connell's novel The Resurrectionist follows the story of a pharmacist named Sweeney who has to infiltrate a make-believe world that may have been at the root of his comatose son's accident. Needless to say, things get pretty weird from there. O'Connell reads at Newtonville Books on May 4.

IMPROPER Sightings!

ATTENTION BOUNTY HUNTERS! BONUS POINTS TO ANYONE WHO CAN CAPTURE AN IMPROPER READER DRIVING A BULLDOZER THROUGH THE SAND SCULPTURE FESTIVAL HELD MAY 10–12 IN CAP D'AGDE, FRANCE.

Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip. Where did you take us? Send us a picture of you or a buddy, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed IMPROPER Sightings.

Clinicians from Children's Hospital Boston traveled to Ghana on a charitable medical mission. We haven't seen this many scrubs together since the 2007 Yankees team photo. (Rim shot, please.)

Dara and Katharine Frankel took a trip to the Barcelona Zoo, where they enjoyed one of the least popular attractions: the fossilized dolphin exhibit.

After this shot, mayor Don Ness of Duluth, Minn., angrily asked: "But seriously, we gave you David Ortiz, Kevin Garnett and Randy Moss, and all I got was this magazine?"

Starr Grady celebrated her 30th birthday by devouring this interesting-looking Wes Welker cake. Welker celebrated by filing a restraining order.

Rockie Horoscope {ROCKIE GARDINER}

YOU'RE UNBELIEVABULL

[APRIL 20–MAY 20]
Round two of having gifts bestowed on you should take place shortly after your Venus ruler makes a grand entrance into Taurus on April 30. Along with the beautiful stuff and desirability the goddess offers, this year, because she favors and is favored in return by both Pluto and Saturn, you're liable to draw some pretty powerful people to your side or to your current cause. The threesome can provide the stabilization that earthy Bulls thrive on, and while there might be a sexual attraction, it's not the main focus.

GEMINI [May 21–June 20]
You know the direct-retrograde drill by now. Your Mercury ruler speeds up a little more each day until, just before it hits the wall and flips into reverse, the little guy is nowhere to be found. By mid-May, when nothing is moving fast enough and Twins start to feel disoriented, don't ask, "Is Mercury retrograde?" Right now your ruling planet is racing along at two degrees a day. Since its next turnaround is slated for Memorial Day, how about ordering supplies, scheduling repairs, confirming reservations and generally covering your tracks now?

CANCER [June 21–July 22]
Before restrictive Saturn, still retrograde in early Virgo, and therefore still very much in most Moon Children's second house of values, assets and acquisitions, turns direct on May 2, feel free to milk as much as you can from goods, services and the cold cash that have been previously promised. The official arbiter of constructive criticism will advance ever so slowly, revisiting situations that may have made you uncomfortable or, more to the point, caused you to grow up sooner than you intended. Karma is a bitch!

LEO [July 23–August 22]
The main event may have already occurred last week when the down-to-earth Taurus sun at the top of your chart, where your reputation is made, energized "forgive me" Pluto and "respect me" Saturn. This week it's Venus' turn to shine her countenance on those stalwarts of the establishment. Since the goddess seeks both peace and pleasure, you're liable to be more popular and, we hope, less conceited than you were. One of the problems with being the king is that annoying sense of entitlement the other denizens of the jungle object to.

VIRGO [August 23–September 22]
Trust the ambitious Virgin to use whatever respectability and/or modicum of restraint you may have gained last week, when your Mercury ruler formed an alliance with Saturn in your sign, to promote something huge. However, if your enthusiasm doesn't pan out according to plan, try laying the blame on the supportive trine between Mercury in Taurus and expansive or, in this case, extravagant Jupiter in your Capricorn house of creativity and risk. Perhaps if you didn't ask for such a big bite of other people's money?

LIBRA [September 23–October 22]
Stop with the guilt; you're not being neglectful. You're simply preparing to adopt a new set of priorities, something that naturally occurs whenever your attentive Venus ruler leaves one sign for another. While her transit of red-hot, true-blue Aries may have exposed a different aspect of an ongoing relationship, Venus' visit to practical yet pleasure-seeking Taurus could show you yet another. Your best bet is to follow up on recent developments, polishing them so they reflect Libran grace, affability and charm.

SCORPIO [October 23–November 21]
It's possible that after gentle Venus enters your Taurus complement on April 30, not only close coworkers, but significant others will become more willing to embrace the softer side of the Scorpion. Not that you'll let your guard down completely, but some allies, perhaps even a worthy antagonist, might ingest a temporary dose of goodness and mercy, and it wouldn't hurt to see those attributes in action. Another plus: These people could appear much more attractive to you. A win-win situation at last.

SAGITTARIUS [November 22–December 21]
Expect a lot of discussions with people advocating a wide range of opinions before you make a fairly significant financial move regarding your own and other people's money. Investing the family fortune? You'll have plenty of time to second-guess yourself once your protective Jupiter ruler turns retrograde in your Capricorn money house on May 9. The planet of good luck (and frequently wild optimism) retraces its path back to mid-February, before it faces forward again on Sept. 6. Did the Pro Bowl, the Potomac primary or the WGA vote affect you?

CAPRICORN [December 22–January 20]
The best is yet to come. So far this year, beneficent Jupiter's transit of Capricorn has been good to you. But how will you fare while the jolly giant is retrograde from May 9 to Sept. 6? Perhaps you should bank some of your good fortune so you can cruise through the summer. Or perhaps you'll have another opportunity to accumulate even more of the good health, wealth and happiness Jupiter bestows. Good news for the easily annoyed: Irritating Mars exits your Cancer complement on May 9, not to return for another two years.

AQUARIUS [January 21–February 18]
More often than not, a cool air sign such as yours needs an occasional wildfire in your life. You might be pleased to learn that for the first time in two years, red-hot Mars will pass through your Leo house of significant others from May 9 to July 1. Don't let this opportunity to forge a warmer, more exciting relationship pass you by. Despite the occasional flare-ups, you'll be glad you didn't. Besides, with Mercury in airy Gemini at that time, you'll still remain relatively rational when it comes to assessing the risks involved.

PISCES [February 19–March 19]
If the face across the table has been slow to react, it may please you to know that Saturn, retrograde since the winter solstice, finally goes direct on May 2. Having such a rock-steady influence in your Virgo house of partners serves some Fish well, while it might hinder others. Only you can determine how great an influence you'll allow coworkers, health professionals and your mate to exert over you. Being a free-flowing water sign, Pisces could be grateful for the boundaries a consistently constructive earth-sign planet sets.

ARIES [March 20–April 19]
Once again push comes to shove as your independent Mars ruler opposes protective Jupiter in your career midheaven. Will this confrontation result in another delay, or will you finally extricate yourself from domestic issues that intensified when Mars first entered Cancer in September? Will a new lease on life await you after Mars crosses into high-spirited Leo on May 9, the same day that Jupiter turns retrograde for the summer? Because the Lion and the Ram play well together, expect four months of creative fun.

ONE NIGHT IN BANGKOK...

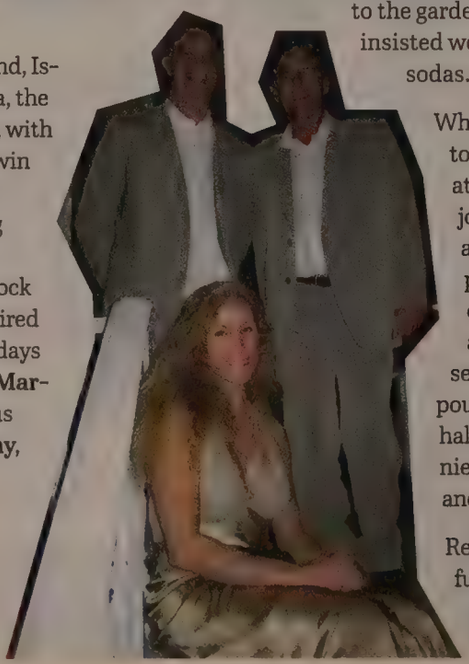
Oedipus and Amy in the dowry ceremony

All weddings, even the bad ones, are good theater.

But when the setting is magical and the proceedings exquisitely beautiful, it's worth flying around the world, which is why an eclectic cast of characters schlepped all the way to Thailand for the wedding of music industry giant Oedipus (formerly of WBCN) and his amazingly gorgeous Thai bride, Amy.

Bangkok in March is sunny and sweltering. Average temperature: hot enough to smelt iron, with humidity in the 210 percent range. Thank God for the Oriental Bangkok, quite possibly the world's best hotel, which served as both HQ and Party Central for the week.

Guests gathered from England, Israel, Belgium, Japan, Canada, the United States and Thailand, with the Boston ranks boasting twin hotel heirs Todd and Tedd Saunders, CBS radio bigwig Tony Berardini and his equestrienne wife, Lynne, rock legend Paul Ahern (who retired to Phuket and plays golf six days a week), noted gastronome Marshall Berenson and fabulous floral designer Kathy LeShay, über-chef Steve Brand of UpStairs on the Square and his babe-a-licious S.O., Jennifer Anderson, sculptress and Fulbright Scholar Laura Baring-Gould, and residents of Dover but citizens of the world Willa and Larry Murray. Then there were music moguls like Dave Nash and Andy Kipnes, on-air talent like Sirius satellite host Kerry Nolan, and Mot Permsak, son of the former Thai ambassador to the U.S., among equally glittery others.



Tony Berardini, Paul Ahern and Lynne Berardini

Things kicked off with a party at an open-air bar 63 stories above the city, with nothing but four feet of Plexiglas between patrons and the pavement below. There was a guys' night out (no comment). There was a girls' night out (ditto). There was a field trip to the world's largest outdoor market and numerous visits to a custom tailor who cut the wedding guests a good deal. There were outings to various temple complexes and copious cocktails by the pool. And then came the big day.

On the morning of the wedding, we traveled an hour north of the city for a traditional Thai ceremony. In a teak house set amid lush gardens, nine monks had been praying since dawn. Nine being an auspicious number in Buddhism, at exactly 9:09 the groom climbed aboard an elephant and was led in a procession of friends and family, dancing and bearing offerings, to the house where he had to bribe a succession of people to get in. A dowry ceremony followed, after which every elder was presented with a gift by the newlyweds. This took time, so some of us dispersed to the garden, where the bride's uncles insisted we join them in whiskey and sodas. It was barely 10 am.

When it was time for us juniors to greet the couple—now seated at an ornate altar, their heads joined by a garland of jasmine and their hands clasped in prayer position over bouquets of flowers—we formed a line and were handed a small seashell full of water. Half was poured over the groom's hands, half over the bride's, accompanied by blessings, good wishes and "Mazel tovs."

Rejoining the Thai uncles for further whiskey and sodas was more entertaining than advisable, but it paved the way for a staggering 11-course feast that included shark fin soup, roast suckling pig, double-boiled duck and other delicacies, which left everyone groaning and swearing they'd never eat again. Famous last words.

The groom being led in a procession atop an elephant

After returning to Bangkok and a brief interregnum (when most of us flopped like beached whales next to the Oriental's pool), the reception began. It was held in the original, 19th-century part of the hotel, which has hosted everyone from Audrey Hepburn, Sophia Loren and Elizabeth Taylor to Princess Diana, Mick Jagger and David Beckham. Called the Author's Lounge because Joseph Conrad, Somerset Maugham, Noël Coward and others not only slept but wrote there, the decor is all white wicker and slowly rotating ceiling fans, evoking a bygone era of colonial torpor.

Roast suckling pig

For the celebration, no expense was spared—buffets serving sushi, tenderloin and pasta, bars and waiters everywhere you turned, and flowers in such profusion that there might not have been anything left at Bangkok's legendary flower market. The music, of course, was excellent, and just when it seemed like things couldn't get any better, a fireworks display exploded over the Chao Phraya River.

"I don't want it to end," said the bride, but the stalwart partyers closed things down with some late-night carousing in the Oriental's super-chic Bamboo Bar.

"I don't know if I'll ever get married," said one guest, "but if I do, it'll definitely involve elephants and fireworks." ✖✖✖

I had a favorite bartender who played the piano for customers on a rainy day. He'd give regulars free songs on the jukebox and drunks free frozen pizza. One time he loaned me cooking pans so I could throw a dinner party. My roommate and I probably spent as much time in his pub as we did in our apartment next door.

He's the bartender I compare all others to. You have similarly high standards, judging by the countless contenders nominated for this issue. Many were deserving, but we whittled the field down to 27. Inside, you'll see where they work and learn how to make their signature drinks (three and a half words: St-Germain Elderflower Liqueur).

Speaking of boozing, have you noticed that mixologists seem as trendy as celebrity chefs right now? In these pages, we un-muddle the history behind creative cocktailing in Boston. You'll also find a story on dressing boho chic.

So throw on some hippie gear and hit the town. Your next favorite bartender awaits.

HOT WHEELS

Last call on a summery Lansdowne Street evening and stranded barflies cluster around Kenmore Square hustling for taxis that smell like dead feet. That's when Brogan Graham, veteran driver for Boston Pedicab, seizes a business opportunity.

"We're working the night when everyone's out," says Graham, 25. "The good drinking crowd, Thursday through Saturday."

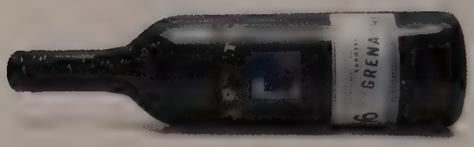
Although pedicabs aren't as ubiquitous in Boston as they are in balmier climes, these bicycle rickshaws are a fast, open-air alternative to expensive, motorized cabs. Says Graham, who's been shuttling pub-crawlers for the past three years, "You're the goofy guy on a bike with a bell. Everyone looks and laughs, but we're secretly very well paid. It's like bartenders." After a baseball game, for example, it's not unknown for a driver to earn a few hundred bucks. But, he adds, a successful pedicabbie needs to know the city streets. He needs to schmooze. And he needs to be in inhumanly good shape.

"Goddamn it. I have all three," jokes Graham, whose wanderings often take him down Boylston Street, into the South End and through the Theater District. "Newbury Street is bad, because there's a light on every block," he says. "Mass. Ave.'s got too much traffic." His most grueling fare was hauling a family of five from the Aquarium to the MFA on a hot day. But his bread and butter is bar hall.

Says Graham, "After a Red Sox game, we're the fastest way to get around town."

ANDREW RIMAS

Good Grenache



The main problem with grenache is identifying it. Some of the best examples, from France's Rhône Valley or various Spanish regions, including Priorat, never mention the grape on the label. Obscurity, however, can be a virtue. Find a good grenache, and you get a lot more than you pay for. Australia has done the best job of producing quality wine while publicizing the grape. Their ancient bush-trained vines yield a miserly quantity of fruit with intensely concentrated flavors. As with pinot noir, there's an inverse relationship between the amount of grenache harvested and wine quality. These three are all very good.

TREVOR JONES "BOOTS" GRENACHE, Barossa Valley, Australia, 2006 (Brix, Boston, $16.99). Grenache isn't usually opaque in color, and this wine's mild garnet tones might suggest a blandness. One whiff proves otherwise: There's red berry jam, minerals, dried figs, anise and chocolate. Creamy on the palate, with an almond-like flavor and smooth, lush texture, Trevor Jones is an exercise in pure sensuality. Made from 70-year-old vines, it's also a steal. Try it with herb-grilled swordfish.

ATTECA, OLD VINE GARNACHA, Calatayud, Spain, 2005 (Marty's Liquors, Newton, $15.99). A horse of a different color, Atteca is deeper, earthier and spicier, with the same red berry flavor, but also undertones of licorice and chocolate. It's very thick and syrupy (grenache has modest levels of acidity), with red pepper, cocoa and hot, exotic spice flavors. There's also more tannin and alcohol. Atteca will stand up to your heartiest meat preparations, including steak au poivre, but anything red, thick and juicy will work.

TIR NA N'OG GRENACHE, McLaren Vale, Australia, 2005 (Wine Emporium, Boston, $25.99). Tir Na N'Og is Gaelic for "land of the youth." It's got a brash raspberry aroma with scents of herbs and root vegetables that carry over to the palate. It also features a bit more refreshing acidity than you generally get with grenache. With delicious, peppery red fruit and vanilla on the finish, this is a fuller-bodied, more assertively flavored wine that'll cut right through any richly textured meat dish, including roasts or stews.

Master of Wine Sandy Block, vice president of beverage operations for Legal Sea Foods

Good Eats

Take the Heat

There's no knocking the Fenway Frank. Any Sox fan worthy of a seat holds the boiled dog sacred. But leave it to Ken Oringer to shake up ballpark eats. Those ticket-holders wanting a spicier kind of fist food should swing by Oringer's Lansdowne Street spot for the chile relleno torta plate. La Verdad's griddled sandwich fires away with chiles and molasses chipotles piled onto a sesame-seed bun. Hunks of mashed avocado, refried black beans, creamy mayonesa and stringy strands of Oaxaca cheese provide some relief. And the accompanying fried plantain ribbons? They're more addictive than Cracker Jacks.

Drink of the Moment

Berry Fine

At Kenmore's Eastern Standard since January 2005, Jackson Cannon has built a reputation as one of the city's more stalwart barmen. Like good friend John Gertsen of No. 9 Park, Cannon knows his trade. He's old-school, scoffing at sluggards who gripe about mojito elbow. The man uses jiggers for crying out loud. Jiggers.

"We use the jiggers for anything where being precise makes a big difference," Cannon explains. With cocktails like the Blueberry Thrill ($10)—a mix of blueberry-infused gin, fresh lemon juice and cardamom spice—precision is key. "Those things are to the drop," he drives home with a point of his finger. "That thing with too much lemon juice is disgusting."

The Blueberry Thrill is a cool seasonal treat. Sweet but not cloying, the taste is more fruit salad than fruit pie. There are tannins and a spice on the finish you don't find in the typical dessert drink. "We use green cardamom from India," Cannon says. "This is that—bang!—masala tea flavor. It's more herbaceous than black cardamom."

Of course there's the regal color. "It's not to say that the man who orders it won't take some ribbing from his friends taking shots of Fernet," Cannon concedes. "But this makes a very fun summer shot." Buy a friendly round on your way home from Fenway. No Red Sox fan can resist a drink on someone else's tab.

BARROOM HERO

"It wasn't to open a bar; it was to open McGreevy's," declares Ken Casey, seated on a stool in his new Boylston Street taproom. The Dropkick Murphy brought McGreevy's 3rd Base Saloon back into the public consciousness when "Tessie" became the fight song of the 2004 Red Sox. "When we wrote 'Tessie' and unearthed it, I wasn't aware of all the history. It seemed like this was the final piece of the puzzle."

The original McGreevy's opened in 1894 and was home to Michael "Nuf Ced" McGreevy, barman and leader of the "Royal Rooters," a tiny hamlet version of what has become Red Sox Nation. McGreevy presided over fans, politicians, gangsters and players like Ty Cobb and the pre-curse Bambino until the establishment closed in 1930 as a result of Prohibition.

The new iteration remains faithful to the old-time decor, thanks largely to co-owner Peter Nash. A film producer and baseball historian, Nash has collected genuine and reproduced versions of Nuf Ced's pictures and placed them in their original locations. Just as in the earlier bar, the light fixtures are made from game-used bats, but instead of "King" Kelly's, you might be lit by Manny's Louisville Slugger. The players will be returning as well, but don't expect to share a booth. There's a VIP room with a back door entrance in the basement, but at least you'll be drinking under the same roof.

A value-priced menu should keep all parties happy. "It's a unique combination of pub food with a twist," Casey explains. "That was important to me for it to be something that could be known for its food and not just another burger." In addition to their signature-spiced burger, diners can grab corned beef and potato croquettes ($6), Irish boxties ($8) and Guinness beef stew ($12), and there's Irish breakfast all day, because fried eggs and brown bread are great whether you're shaking one off or tacking one on.

"It'll be a good nightlife spot and not something laid-back," Casey assures. "You'll see everything from Sox players to real Boston people having a good time. But it's also a place a father can bring his son to see the history."

DRIVEN TO DISTRACTION

TO THE WONDERFUL CITY bus driver who saved my wallet:

Treva Knight, you are a SAINT! After running around town for hours, I stopped for a gas fill-up in Dorchester. I put my wallet on the roof of my car, reminding myself several times to grab it before pulling away. But a phone call and several e-mails on the Blackberry later, I hopped in my car, sped off and left my wallet in the street. After returning to my office an hour later, I received your kind call and offer to wait for me at Andrew Station before starting your route. I hope you enjoyed the cookies—a small token of my appreciation. Believe me, if there had been cash in my wallet, I would have given you that as well! So if you see a tall, funny woman driving bus 2104, thank her again for me. You can learn a lot from people who practice the Golden Rule—people like Treva.

Trish Karter

To the nasally woman in front of me at Saks on Saturday:

True Religion jeans don't do anything for your husband's ass, and nobody needs to have you sticking your face in that Bugaboo exclaiming "Eeeww, stinky—someone's cooking me up a treat!"

Appalled in the Mall

To bastards taking advantage of me:

We pay less for standing room only when we go see The Lion King, so why are we charged full fare when forced to stand in the fing aisles commuting every morning? Guess what? Most of us head to the office around 8:45, so use the double-deckers then, not at 6:50!

Commuter in Hell

To the guy driving the box truck on Chestnut Hill Ave. on Tuesday morning:

When I mouthed "Sorry!" to you after accidentally (key word here) blocking you in at Englewood Street and preventing you from being able to make that left onto Chestnut Hill Ave., I meant it. I didn't need you to scream that I'm a "fing c-bomb" (yeah, I could perfectly read those lips) so aggressively that spit came flying out of your dirty mouth. Crap happens and traffic sucks, but I'd be willing to bet that you've pissed off plenty of people with your douchey driving (by accident and on purpose) on more than one occasion. Calm yourself down, chief.

You moved to Boston from Alaska last October to follow your dream:

We first met on Thanksgiving night at a dive bar in the Back Bay and developed a friendship. Later, with a little help from me, you landed a job at that same bar. I promised to take you to your first Sox game and did so; we had a blast and you called me a perfect host, and we hugged and said good night with us both smiling. Then without warning you sent me the coldest and most heartless e-mail I have ever received and said your dad back in Anchorage told you to have no more contact with me, but you refused to tell me why. I moved heaven and earth to get you an audition for a chance to sing at a major Boston venue that you would have aced. So keep slinging drinks in the Back Bay. Three years from now, when you're back in Alaska singing karaoke to polar bears, I hope you think back to what could have been.

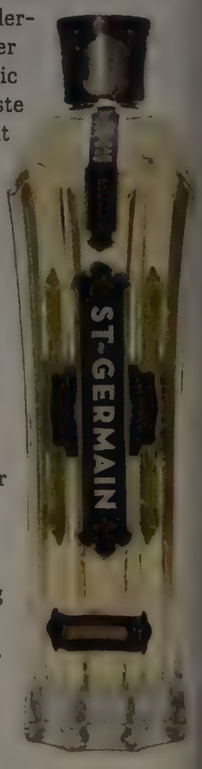
ASK THE EXPERT

Q: ST-GERMAIN ELDERFLOWER LIQUEUR HAS RECENTLY EXPLODED ON THE BOSTON BAR SCENE. WHAT'S BEHIND THE CRAZE?

MISTY KALKOFEN BAR MANAGER AT GREEN STREET GRILL IN CAMBRIDGE



For a long time, all we had available to create cocktails with the elderflower flavor was an elderflower cordial, which was nonalcoholic and very unstable. It would taste really good for a day or two, but then it would become like [a] lava lamp in your cooler. So now with St-Germain, we have this great elderflower flavor—which is really lovely and delicate and perfumey—and it's stable and consistent, and they're using high-quality ingredients.... The other great part about it is that you can use it in traditional cocktails like a gin martini, but it's lower in alcohol—only 40 proof—so you can also use it to make a really light cocktail with soda water or a little bit of sparkling wine. It's something you can enjoy on a summer day and not drink too much of and end up wasted by two o'clock. It's a very versatile spirit.

Beauty

Best Foot Forward

For six long months your toes have been in hiding, and the boot-to-sandal transition is looking a little rough. Just in time, MiniLuxe has opened on Newbury. The modern nail and beauty shop will soon offer seven types of pedicures. Their most popular, the Citrus Burst ($42), pampers with a passion fruit–lime scrub and shea butter cream. Guys who prefer to keep their pedis single-sex can head to Barbershop Lounge down the street, where "spa" means pool table and flat screens. The men's grooming haven features a foot treatment ($30), complete with clipping, soaking and cuticle repair, in a dimly lit, secluded room. It gives a whole new meaning to getting nailed.

WHITE OUT

In some ways, the fiercest, most fearless color to sport is none at all. A white purse is bright, bold and, of course, easily stained. So we applaud those of you who embrace this brave trend in handbags. The payoff? A luxurious leather tote—in any shade from creamy latte to fresh snow—adds an abundance of cool to your look. So go ahead, dress on the edge—and invest in a good leather-protector spray. RUTH BASLOE

Cut the Cord

THE WORLD'S WORST ex–mother-in-law is a delicious character for Mameve Medwed to skewer and serve up in zippy, witty style in her new novel. Medwed's victim, charming Maisie, forever fending off the insulting ex-MIL, looks rather golden as she pokes around local lives through her organizing business, Factotum Inc. This work has Somerville's working-class types intersecting with Harvard academics. Professor Seamus O'Toole, a Joyce scholar, gooey with lyrical butterscotch in his heart, adores his Factotum helper Darlene. Good-hearted Darlene is warring with her own trashy mother-in-law, Carlene, over the custody of her baby, Anthony Vincent. His touchingly over-formal name is an emblem of their aspirations for the child to cross the line to Harvard. Maisie's own privileged son, Tommy, meanwhile, takes up, worryingly, with September, a sweet, versifying dropout from Somerville. But Maisie nurtures this little romantic vagabond landed on her doorstep, reversing the curse, an understanding mother to her son, accepting to his girlfriend. Pleasingly, a therapist who loved his own mother comes to love Maisie.

Of Men and Their Mothers is by Mameve Medwed, who lives in Cambridge.

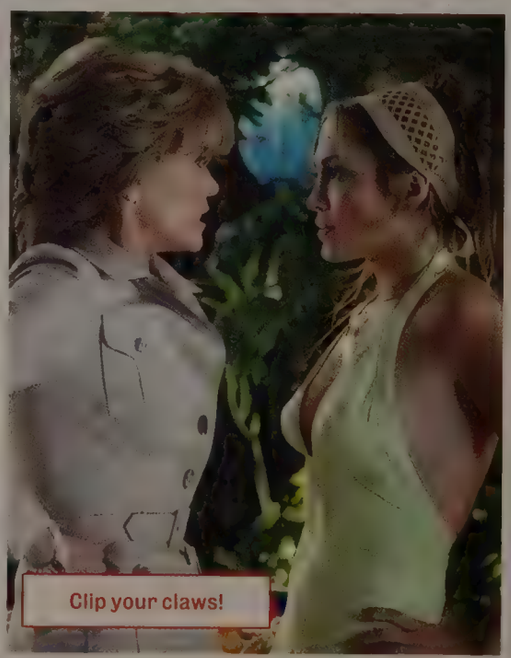
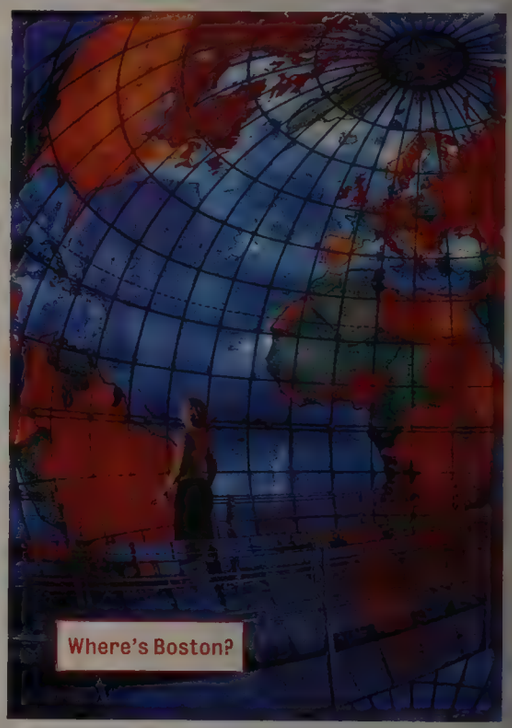
FOR REAL Mother-in-law jokes are based on fact.





TAKE THE STAGE Geography at the Mapparium

Through the Looking Glass

AS YOU ENTER the Mary Baker Eddy Library, your first exotic entrancement is a high-columned room. At the center sits a large, circular fountain, delicately pulsing with water. Within, white letters swirl, gradually swimming together to make words, which magically leap to the wall to form inspiring quotations from people like Emerson. Next comes the Mapparium, a gigantic stained-glass map of the world as it was in 1935, turned inside-out with a walk-across bridge. Bright red, blue and green glisten, with mother-countries and their child-colonies often shown in the same color, vividly illustrating a very different world than exists now. There are some distortions in appearances: Greenland seems larger than South America, though the continent is eight times bigger. A brief video shows the moon landing amidst recorded voices, including Martin Luther King Jr.'s haunting exhortations and Gandhi saying, "An eye for an eye ends up making the whole world blind." Mapparium acoustics are fascinating; a vocal ping-pong sends a whisper clearly across the bridge.

If Betty Ann Food Shop occupied the 500 block of Tremont Street rather than a modest East Boston corner, the push-button cash register, thin haze of flour dust and faded sea-foam walls would seem like an Anthropologie-decorated throwback. We'd marvel: They don't have soy milk! They don't support Wi-Fi! They just have sweets!

But Betty Ann's is the real deal, and the lack of frills fits. The mom-and-pop anomaly hasn't changed a darn thing since 1931, weathering a handful of wars, the Atkins craze and that popular chain. (Note: quirky, morning-only hours and no pennies, please.) If America took one bite of the bakery's sugar-dredged donut—still warm from the oil and bursting with red-currant jam—it'd be running back for more.

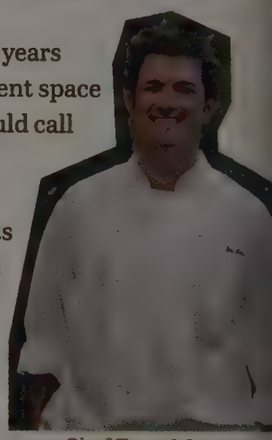
MAWS GOES "MAIN" STREAM

Craigie Street Bistrot moves on...

Uncertainty comes with the territory when you move your neighborhood restaurant to a new part of town. But Tony Maws, chef/owner of Cambridge's Craigie Street Bistrot, is looking forward to one specific advantage of the bigger kitchen he'll have when he reopens this fall near Central Square: "I'm not going to get clocked in the head five times during service," Maws laughs.



Chef Tony Maws

After five and a half years ensconced in a basement space a real estate agent would call "cozy," he anticipates major changes when Craigie on Main debuts on Main Street (in the soon-to-be-former space of La Groceria). Besides a full liquor license, a waiting area and room for 99 seats, Maws plans to serve lunch and also offer "our version of a bar menu." But regulars need not fear change: "We'll stay true to who we are," he promises.

Arepa alert! Later than expected—call it South American time—Orinoco has finally opened its sibling restaurant in Brookline Village. Owner Andres Branger says it's "exactly the same" as the popular South End eatery, except for one feature: a chef's table that will offer a special menu on Saturday nights. Here's the deal: It's the only seat at Orinoco that can be reserved. Actually, it's 14 seats—although Branger says it's more comfortable for 12—and if you want to book a large party during the week at what will otherwise be a communal table, it can be arranged.

Arresting news: Located in the former Toast space in Somerville, the Precinct is charged with offering a lineup of live bands and a menu of comfort food. Both the owner (Ken Kelly of the Independent) and chef (Janice Silva, formerly of C.F. Donovan's in Dorchester) have records... of working in the industry, of course.

STELLA ARTOIS

rfection HAS ITS PLACE

fectly poured Stella Artois is the Gold Standard of Belgian beer.

Step One THE PURIFICATION
The bartender selects the signature glass for the beer being poured. The glass is scrubbed in a cool-water bath, preferably with a mild detergent. It's then rinsed with cold water to chill the glass.

Step Two THE SACRIFICE
The tap is opened in one swift motion to let the first burst of foam flow away. It must never enter the glass, thus ensuring every drop of beer is fresh.

Step Three THE LIQUID ALCHEMY
The glass is held at a 45-degree angle to create the perfect balance of liquid to foam.

Step Four THE HEAD
The head is created by straightening and lowering the glass. The foam is visually appealing and releases the beer's aroma.

Step Five THE REMOVAL
The bartender closes the tap in one quick action and moves the glass away from the faucet to ensure no drops spoil the perfect head.

Step Six THE BEHEADING
While the beer is flowing over the edge of the glass, the bartender cuts the head gently with a head cutter at a 45-degree angle. This eliminates the larger bubbles that burst easily and accelerate the dissipation of the head.

Step Seven THE JUDGMENT
The bartender now stands in judgment. The beer's head should be two fingers thick.

Step Eight THE CLEANSING
The bartender then rinses the bottom and sides of the glass. This keeps the glass clean and cool and makes it comfortable to hold.

Step Nine THE BESTOWAL
A perfectly poured pint of Belgian beer is presented with the logos of the coaster and glass facing the customer.

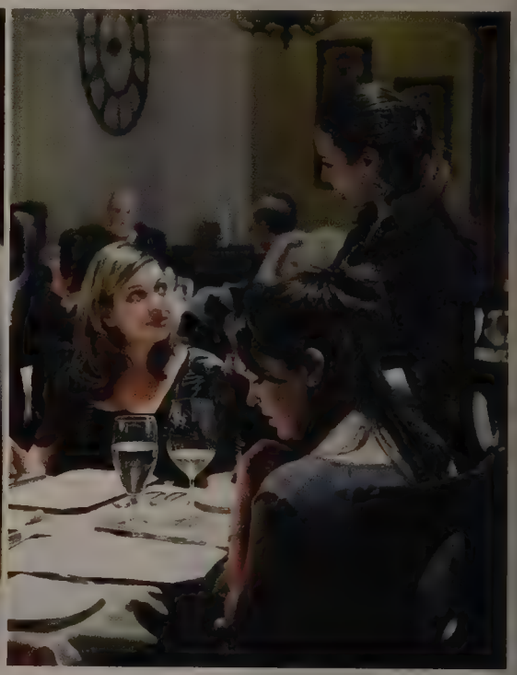
ITALO FILE

La Campania fans find an urban home at Da Vinci Ristorante.



CALF TIME Beehive chef Rebecca Newell orders Da Vinci's giant veal chop.

Rebecca Newell considers any night when someone else is cooking a good night. As executive chef at the Beehive, Newell's had a busy spring getting the restaurant's brunch going and designing the patio menu. On a rare evening off, I convinced her to join me at the newly opened Da Vinci Ristorante.

Chef Shingara Singh (aka Peppino) and partner Wioletta Zywina decided to open their own place while working together at La Campania in Waltham. They found a space on Columbus Avenue (formerly Piattini) at the crossroads of the South End and the Back Bay. Both Rebecca and I agreed that this particular part of town wasn't screaming for an Italian spot (Piattini died a slow, sad death), but the crowd proved us wrong; the place was almost full on the Thursday night we ate there. Many diners, we learned, were La Campania fans who followed chef Peppino into the city.

It's an opulent room decorated with plush curtains and carpets, statuettes, and burgundy and gold accents. It took a few minutes, but we both managed to feel comfortable in our dressy jeans. The host led us to a table that overlooked the open kitchen. Things were buzzing back there, but Peppino seemed to spend more time chatting up the diners than he did manning the stove. He stopped by our table a few times, checking in after each course.

Rebecca asked me to pick out a white wine, so I perused the all-Italian list and settled on a light, crisp soave. Our young server wasn't always well-versed in the menu but made up for it with her enthusiasm. Leaving us to catch up, she brought over a basket of homemade focaccia covered with bits of olive and caramelized onion, served with an eggplant-and-squash puree and basil-infused olive oil.

We started dipping, chewing and chatting, and soon I was immersed in Becca's (as her friends call her) story. Originally from Glen Falls, N.Y., the 30-year-old went to the New England Culinary Institute in Vermont before moving to Florida and then up to Boston, where she trained at several top kitchens, eventually landing a spot with the Aquitaine Group. She worked at Union and later became the executive chef at Aquitaine Bis, which she left last fall to join the Beehive. She seems to have found a place that matches her quirky tastes and excitable personality.

Becca leapt from one topic to the next, often stopping mid-sentence to start another. It was hard to keep up, but always the conversation came back to food. "Jack [Bardy, co-owner of the Beehive] tells me not to use too much truffle oil, but I love the stuff," she raved before zeroing in on the menu's veal chop, which we considered ordering. "It's so hard for restaurants to do whole veal chops. They're getting so expensive."

We began with the affordable arancini ($7), crispy balls of risotto and buffalo mozzarella fried in olive oil. These were split in half over a pile of arugula and, like every chef I've eaten with, Becca pulled them apart piece by piece, tasting the vinaigrette, the phyllo and the arancini separately before taking a big bite of it all together. "Do you think that's balsamic?" she asked, quickly moving on to the next subject.

For our pasta course, we tried the chef's signature tasting ($16) of three small, homemade dishes: gnocchi with fava beans and prosciutto, fusilli smothered in a dense bolognese sauce, and to Becca's delight, a pappardelle folded with chanterelles and white truffle oil. She dug into that one while I went straight for the gnocchi. "Oh, it's perfectly cooked," Becca smiled before moving to the gnocchi. "I like the contrast of the textures on this one."

Thankfully, we split the veal chop ($35) as our main course; its Flintstonian size would have done just one of us in. Our conversation turned toward the city's various kitchens and what it's like to be a woman in charge behind the line. "I've had a guy spit on me, actually. It isn't easy," she shared.

Dessert seemed impossible after our enormous meal, but we couldn't resist a sampler anchored by a goblet of tiramisu. One bite after another, we almost devoured the whole thing but stopped short of death by gluttony. "Really," Becca said as we made our way out. "How could we have said no?" ×××

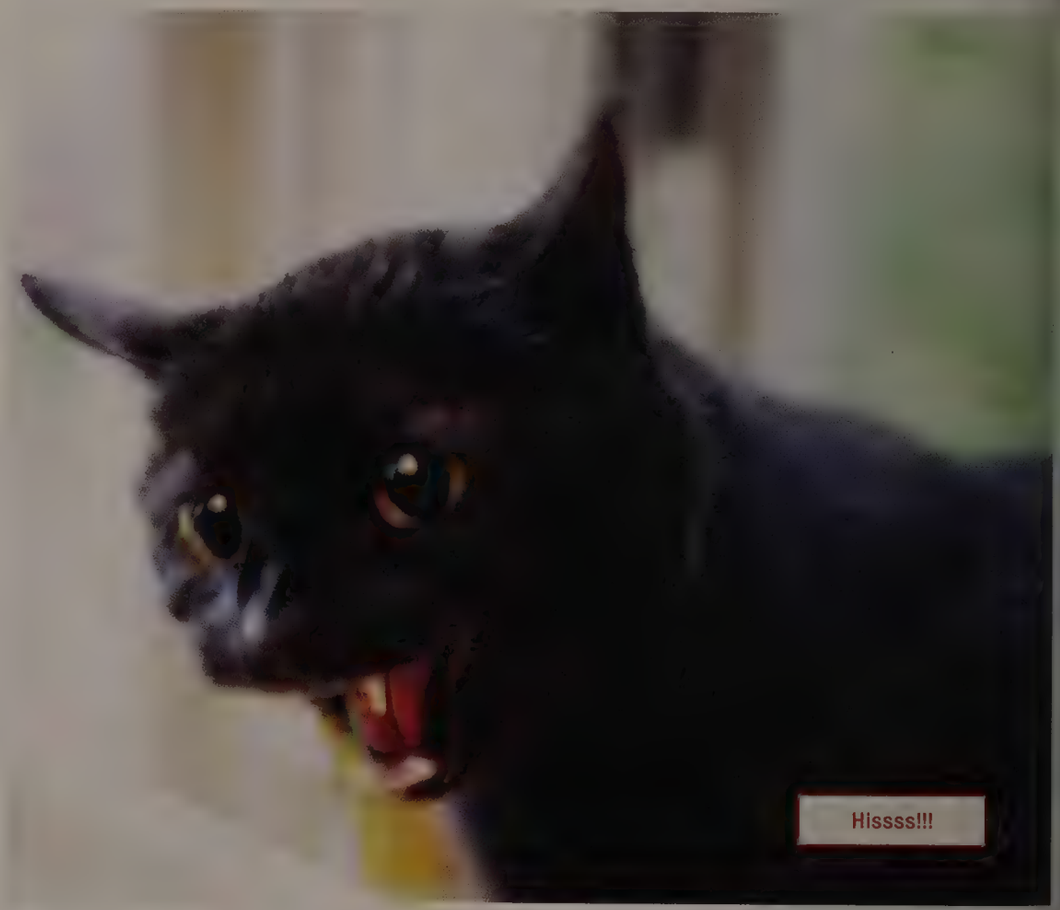
Truths and myths about cats



I've got nothing against cats. Cats are perfect in certain contexts, such as carved into the side of an Egyptian sarcophagus, as a punch line on ALF, or as an accessory in an apartment filled with Yankee candles, Pier One knick-knacks and Anne Geddes posters. But they're not for me, as confirmed by my recent adventure in cat-sitting.

Heather and I agreed to watch our friend Ashley's cat, Nala, while Ashley was on vacation. Cats are low-maintenance—so goes the popular wisdom—so I figured this would be easy. The cat doesn't need to go for walks. It doesn't need to go outside to go to the bathroom. Cats sleep about 23 hours a day. We probably wouldn't even notice Nala unless our dog, Manny, tried to eat her. But after hosting Nala at our apartment for 24 hours and reflecting on my own lifetime experience with cats, I feel qualified to dispel some myths and misperceptions about them.

Urban cats live weird lives. They can't go for walks outside. They poop in a box.

Why? Because I hope to spin this into a book and get rich, like the Marley and Me guy. (But for cats.) So then, without further ado, the story on Nala and Me.

Myth No. 1: Cats are low-maintenance. Fact: Cats are insane.

At bedtime, we turned off the lights and Manny flopped down on the floor next to the bed, because dogs are cool with doing whatever you're doing. Nala, on the other hand, took lights-out as a signal to begin pacing the room while emitting a mournful yowl that sounded like a 4-year-old child being sucked into a thresher while fighting with poltergeists. I pulled a pillow over my head in an attempt to drown out this creepy sound track, to no avail.

Eventually, the zombie-summoning wail ceased, and I was about to pull the pillow off my head when it suddenly became much heavier. The cat had stopped screeching, it turned out, because she was content. And she was content because she was sitting on my head.

Inhaling cat dander didn't qualify as an improvement, so I picked her up and moved her to the foot of the bed. She came back to the pillow. I moved her. She came back, because evidently she didn't get the memo that she was low-maintenance. Finally, I placed her on the floor hoping that she'd display some of that famous feline independence and go away, hopefully over to someone else's house. Not quite. Instead, she commenced an air attack on Heather's side of the bed, leaping from the floor and dropping from the sky, a cat-ellite crashing down on our faces with dusty kitty-litter paws.

Finally, in the wee hours of the night, Nala got it through her walnut-sized brain that perhaps our faces were not actually cat beds. She disappeared to the floor for a few minutes and we thought, naively, that it might be time to sleep. Then, from the area around the end of the bed, I heard a disheartening sound familiar from growing up with cats. "What's that noise?" Heather asked groggily. "That," I replied, "is the sound of a cat throwing up."

I know we slept at some point, because when Heather got up and cleaned the cat puke, it was on the hardwood. But there must've been a second incident during our brief, fitful slumber—shortly after I awakened, I discovered a curious stain on the carpet next to the bed. There'd obviously been an episode of reverse-peristalsis on the carpet as well, but most of it was gone. That meant that, after the crime was committed, someone ate the evidence. You may be thinking that Manny was the accomplice there, but I assure you that Manny is a noble beast who, while prone to licking his own bum and eating mud at the park, would probably never eat someone else's throw-up.

But if he did, that was actually very low-maintenance of him.

Myth No. 2: Cats are cleaner than dogs. Fact: Cats crap in a box and then jump right in your lap.

Is there anything more disgusting than a cat box? A kid I knew in grade school once got diarrhea while over at a friend's house and, finding the bathroom occupied, ran down to the basement and went in the cat box. Of course, the other kid told everyone at school, and the next day everyone made meowing noises and pantomimed scratching kitty litter over a turd every time they saw that guy.

The whole concept of a house cat is pretty deranged, if you ask me. They're prisoners.

Myth No. 3: Cats are independent. Fact: Cats steal a baby's breath.

The Siamese we had when I was growing up—and my parents still have, now age 20—once got caught sleeping on the frame of my pickup truck. She awakened with the truck in motion and hung on until it stopped about 10 miles later. For the next seven days she lived in the wild until the girl I'd visited the week prior mentioned that there was a strange cat around her house. We went over and shook a bag of food, and the cat emerged from a nearby field as good as new, having probably decimated the local mouse population over the previous week. Now that's an independent cat, the Bear Grylls of cats—you can parachute her in anywhere and she'll live off the land for a week, no problem. But she's the exception. Nala, for instance, wouldn't even drink water, no matter how thirsty she was, unless it was running from a faucet. I don't think Nala's making it to 20.

Myth No. 4: Cats are really smart and understand what you're saying, but they just don't care. Fact: Cats are stupid.

When I was a kid, we had a cat named Fuzzy. Fuzzy once disappeared for a few days, and I eventually found him stuck inside one of the lobster traps stacked next to our barn. You'd think a cat would be able to escape a lobster trap, but that supposition depends on the premise that cats are smarter than lobsters. Fuzzy, at least, was not smarter than a lobster, as ultimately proven by the fact that lobsters know better than to play in the road.

Myth No. 5: It's normal to have a house cat. Fact: I don't think so.

Urban cats live weird lives. They can't go for rides in the car or for walks outside. They spend their entire lives inside a confined area and poop in a box. They don't have a vocabulary and can't express their needs. The whole concept of a house cat is pretty deranged, if you ask me. They're essentially prisoners, so I really can't blame them for going Siegfried & Roy every now and then.

Actually, maybe I need to reconsider one of the aforementioned myths. In spending her night puking and yowling and dive-bombing our heads, maybe Nala let us off easy. After all, she didn't maim us. Maybe, in cat terms, that's considered low-maintenance. ×××

BRING ON THE MAYO

The recovery process began on Draft Day.

HERE WE ARE four months later and the pain persists. It's not as biting, mind you, but it still hurts. Do you know that since Feb. 3, it took more than two months for me to go one full day without someone bringing up that damn game?

The New York Giants won the Super Bowl. You've got to be kidding me.

Maybe it's therapeutic for people to vent their anguish, but as time goes by, it's becoming clear that this may be one of those losses that only time will heal.

Lots and lots of time.

Whenever I see that pass from the Hillbilly (Eli Manning) to the Nobody (David Tyree), I think maybe this time he'll drop it.

The day before this year's NFL draft I caught up with Patriots defensive tackle Vince Wilfork. As it turned out, he wasn't over it yet either.

"But we must move on," Wilfork said. "We have to. We really don't have any other choice."

So I asked myself: If Vince has almost moved on, why can't I?

Here's one reason I might: Jerod Mayo, the linebacker the Patriots chose with the 10th overall pick. To be honest, I was in shock after the call. I was thinking a big body for one of the lines. Isn't that always the case on Draft Day in Foxboro?

The Patriots drafted two linebackers, Mayo and Shawn Crable from Michigan, with the 78th pick. If you add in second-rounder Terrence Wheatley, a cornerback from Colorado, we're talking speed and athleticism on the defense. Bill Belichick said that wasn't his objective at the beginning of the draft, but we know better.

He finally addressed some glaring needs (even though it's hard to imagine that a team that finished 18-1 has "glaring needs").

"We went into it open-minded," Belichick said at a news conference. "We really did. We certainly wanted to get younger and faster on defense, but I have been saying that for six years. We just had some opportunities here that there were players that fell into that category, whether it be linebackers or defensive backs."

Jerod Mayo's humility should sit just right in the Patriots' locker room.

So much money and scouting time has been spent on defensive linemen like Wilfork, Ty Warren and Richard Seymour, the latter being the last top-10 pick Belichick and Scott Pioli had.

Even Belichick noticed the abnormality.

"Who would have ever thought you would be covering a Bill Belichick draft with no offensive linemen, defensive linemen or tight ends taken, right?"

No question, drafting guys who work in the trenches has been Belichick's bread and butter. But this draft was about another condiment, and there'll be no "holding the Mayo" in Foxboro, hopefully for the next decade.

I really like Mayo. I like his humility, which should sit just right in the Patriots' locker room. I love the fact that the former Tennessee linebacker, who was minutes from a call that would make him a multimillionaire, was doing his chores on Draft Day. I don't think my dad could have made me do that.

"The plan was to do yard work," he said. "I was picking up leaves with my mom, and I couldn't do it any more after one bag. I was sitting on the porch, just sitting there thinking, and Coach Belichick called me. I was very excited."

So was I.

The Patriots brought Mayo in prior to the draft and he was sold.

"I had 11 visits during this whole process and there wasn't an atmosphere that you felt the winning tradition like you did when you walked into the building with the Patriots," Mayo enthused. "I'm not sure if that's because I watch all of their games, but it was just in my mind. I felt the vibe from the coaches and just from everybody."

Well, if winning is his thing, as he says it is, he has found a home in Foxboro, and he'll learn from the best. ✖✖✖

DENNIS AND CALLAHAN, SNOOP DOGG, PLAYOFF HOOPS AND PAPI

4 Playoffs Perceptions

On the Rebound... Of all the potential Celtic downfalls that have been exposed thus far in the playoffs, the one that worries us the most is defensive rebounding. The Cavs and Pistons are both in the top 10 in offensive rebounding, and if Kendrick Perkins gets in foul trouble there's a serious void down low.

Does That Make Big Baby Rich Garces?... Sam Cassell is the Tim Wakefield of the Celtics. All Wake has is his knuckler, and if it's not moving, there's no way he'll be effective. Cassell's knuckleball is his jumper, and if the shot's not falling, you need to take him out before things turn ugly—or in Sam's case, really ugly.

Your Biweekly Rondo Love Letter... Nothing gets us more excited than the prospect of watching Rajon Rondo every night for the next 10 years or so; the playoffs are just another step on his path to greatness. (In full disclosure, our last Celtics man crush was Gerald Green—who was last seen selling giant foam fingers at a Rockets game.)

Where "Every Day Is July 4" Happens... Quick question: The fireworks at home games are cool and all, but at what point does it become counterproductive to make every first half look like the C's are playing in Snoop Dogg's dressing room?

ONE NEW RULE OF THUMB

Julio's Law. There comes a time, when a shortstop has proven his ineptness beyond a reasonable doubt, that no matter how much money he's making, you must cut your losses and move on before he does some serious damage.

5 RED SOX REVELATIONS

Calling His Bluff... You know that guy at poker night who consistently stays in with crappy hands, but keeps pulling miracles on the river and eventually walks away with all your money? That's Dice-K in 2008. He might have the least impressive and/or deserving 5-0 start in major league history.

Lester Is More (Haha, Get It?)... Clay Buchholz gets most of the hype, but Jon Lester best embodies all there is to love about the Red Sox. He's only eight months older than Clay, but the way the team treats the pair, you'd think Lester was a 10-year vet.

Punxsutawney Papi... All Spring Training we heard how healthy David Ortiz was, how the knee looked great and wouldn't be an issue this year. Two months in and it already is. Much like 2007, Papi's going to need rest going forward, and the season's starting to feel a little too much like Groundhog Day—hopefully they don't change his at-bat music to "I Got You, Babe."

Lowell Packs a Punch... One of the most impressive aspects of the Red Sox' hot start is that they've done it without Mike Lowell. Not only have the Sox proven that they can withstand a hit to the lineup, but adding a healthy Lowell to the mix is like adding Tabasco sauce to Chinese mustard: potent.

But Don't Worry About Rolling Stones... Strange year so far for Brandon Moss. He hits a game-tying home run in Japan, then gets sent down to the minors a day later. On May 2, he has his best night of the year (2-4, HR, 2 runs) and goes in for an emergency appendectomy the following day. Odds of Moss getting struck by lightning while rounding the bases on his next dinger? 2 to 1.

2 MEDIA MUSINGS

Conservatively Speaking... Nothing beats turning on Dennis and Callahan the morning after a Celtics playoff win and listening to a heated debate on the Tuskegee Experiment. You've got to hand it to them: It can't be easy packing so much racism into a daily block while managing to stay on the air.

Hit the Road, Mac... We'll miss Jackie MacMullan. Despite a couple of questionable moves in recent years—like running a controversial, two-month-old Asante Samuel interview during the 2006 playoffs—MacMullan was the lone Globe columnist who seemed to care as much about the current landscape of Boston sports as she did the top stories of 1986. It was always refreshing.

3 DATES TO WATCH

5/16 The Brewers take on the Red Sox in a game that marks the start of interleague play, as well as Eric Gagne's triumphant return to Fenway Park—reminiscent of John Travolta revisiting the set of Battlefield Earth.

5/17 Post time at the Preakness down at Maryland's Pimlico Race Course, as Big Brown goes for the second leg of the Triple Crown. Just wondering: Does Eight Belles get a photo in the "People Who've Died This Year" montage at the ESPYs?

5/20 Once upon a time, in a galaxy far, far away, this was the most important day of the year. But in 2008, tonight's NBA draft lottery is little more than a halftime distraction, or just another opportunity to wish ill fortune upon the Knicks.

"I'm still workin' hard for the money. But I've enjoyed almost every second of it."

Soroff On DONNA SUMMER

The Queen of Disco talks about her voice, her Grammys and working hard for the money.

Five-time Grammy Award winner Donna Summer was born LaDonna Gaines and raised in Dorchester. Summer began singing as a child and caught her first break at 18 when she landed a role in Hair on Broadway. She then moved to Europe, and after success overseas returned to the States and achieved her first U.S. hit with "Love to Love You Baby." She also has six American Music Awards and has topped the charts every decade since the '70s, selling more than 130 million records worldwide. Her latest album is Crayons, and its first single, "I'm a Fire," recently reached No. 1 on Billboard's Hot Dance Club Play Chart. A former resident of Newton and now a grandmother, she lives in Southern California.

Jonathan Soroff: So how does it feel to be at the top of the charts again?
Donna Summer: At first it went right over my head, because I was concentrating on the new music. But then when I stopped to pause, I was like, "Hey, that's pretty cool."

Did you ever feel pigeon-holed by the Queen of Disco label?
No, because I never saw myself that way. I was just writing and recording my music, so the label never meant that much to me.

Where do you keep all your Grammys?
They're in boxes somewhere. I've never had any of the music stuff, except instruments, around while my kids were growing up, because I didn't think it was healthy to have all these awards or gold records or things they might feel a need to live up to or compete against.

Does the hoopla over "Love to Love You Baby" seem silly?
In retrospect, yes, but at the time, it was fairly radical. We were coming out of a very repressed, buttoned-down era, and that's what the hippy and disco movement was about—saying, "Who says I can't wear stripes with polka dots, and why do I have to wear three layers of stuff underneath my skirt?" So it was pretty daring for the time.

Did you ever really disavow it?
No, of course not. That's just one of those stories. The truth is that I never meant to sing that song. I just wrote it, thinking someone else would record it. And I was lying around, trying to come up with lyrics, just making noise, and without knowing it, the guys in the booth were recording it and laughing. That's how the original song came out, and it got released that way.

PHOTOGRAPH BY Michael Brandt

So it wasn't, as everybody said, a simulated orgasm?
[Laughs.] Well, I don't know about their love lives, but that sure as hell isn't mine. I'm much louder than that.

Were you ever a bad girl?
Not in the sense of doing bad stuff, but I was definitely pushing the envelope, wearing what was considered out-there fashions or whatever. I knew what I wanted to do and what I needed to do to get there, so my whole world consisted of school, rehearsal and choir practice.

Did disco ever really die?
Well, it choked a little bit. It got something stuck in its windpipe and needed a respirator. [Laughs.] But seriously, it just evolved into something else. Dance music never went anywhere.

How about all the things like spandex and gold lamé minis and tube tops?
With these thighs, honey? I don't think so.

Favorite memory of Studio 54?
I guess the time I was singing and some guy jumped out of the balcony, landed in the middle of the dance floor and let out this incredible scream. Everyone just froze. They didn't know what to do.

Do you think Diana Ross was ever jealous of you?
What did she have to be jealous of? She had a constant string of hits. So no, definitely not. She was around way before me, and she's had as much success as it's possible to have.

"I Feel Love" has been credited with spawning techno music. Do you think that's true?
It was certainly a unique sound, so I can see that. While we were writing that song, we kept trying to come up with lyrics, and none of them were really working. So I said, "Let's just leave it simple and pure. It's a chant." And that's how it came out.

Favorite duet you ever did?
Well, it would have to be [with] Barbra Streisand. She's the ultimate, and it was a pleasure and a privilege to work with her. I haven't done too many others.

Who else would you like to do a duet with?
Sting.

OK, big question: What the hell is "MacArthur Park" about—a cake, a playground, what?
It's about love. If you see the cake as a metaphor for love, it can't survive being left out in the elements. It'll fall apart. You need to take care of it.

You've broken so many records. What's the one you're most proud of?
I think the three [back-to-back] double albums. Because they just don't make them anymore.

What's your vocal range?
I honestly don't know, but I do know that my voice has changed. My tonsils have started growing back, and I can hear it when I sing. I can sing around it, but I've had problems with my voice, despite the fact that I don't smoke, don't really drink except for an occasional glass of champagne, and I take good care of myself.

Over the course of your career, would you say you've worked hard for the money?
I'm still workin' hard for the money. But I've enjoyed almost every second of it.

A few years ago, there were reports that you'd repudiated your gay fan base. Is that true?
That was such a fabrication. I've always known who my fans are, and gay men are a big part, if not the majority. I love all my fans. I also have a lot of gay men in my life and always have. But I thought that whole thing was so obviously absurd, I didn't bother to defend myself or speak out against it. I was just like, "What?! You gotta be kidding me." I consider it a nonissue.

Last question: When do you think your last dance will be and with whom?
I have no idea, but I hope it's not for a long, long time. ✖✖✖

Boston's Beloved Bartenders 2008

By: Jonathan Soroff
Photographs by: Tracy Powell

XOXO

Five favorite words in the English language: "What can I get you?" —when uttered by a truly great bartender.

FAR BEYOND SIMPLY MIXING drinks, a truly great bartender creates a memorable experience—whether through attentive service, attention to detail, speed, humor, sarcasm, willingness to listen, ability to dispense well-considered advice, making introductions, keeping the conversation flowing, tossing bottles in the air, or any combination thereof. So while many a mixologist is doomed to mediocrity, a few shining stars earn our undying admiration in this, our annual roundup of the very best in the profession plying their trade in these parts.

In anointing our all-stars, we rely on readers' suggestions, submitted via a ballot published in the magazine. These we receive by the bushel and sort through, tallying votes. We also take our own knowledge of the city into consideration and, in finalizing our list, try to cover as much territory as possible. This year you'll also find an old fave from the Beehive, where familiar faces tend to turn up.

As always, we've gathered each winner's signature drink recipe, so you can try to recreate some of the magic in the privacy of your own home. So enjoy our 14th annual class of beloved bartenders. And please read responsibly.

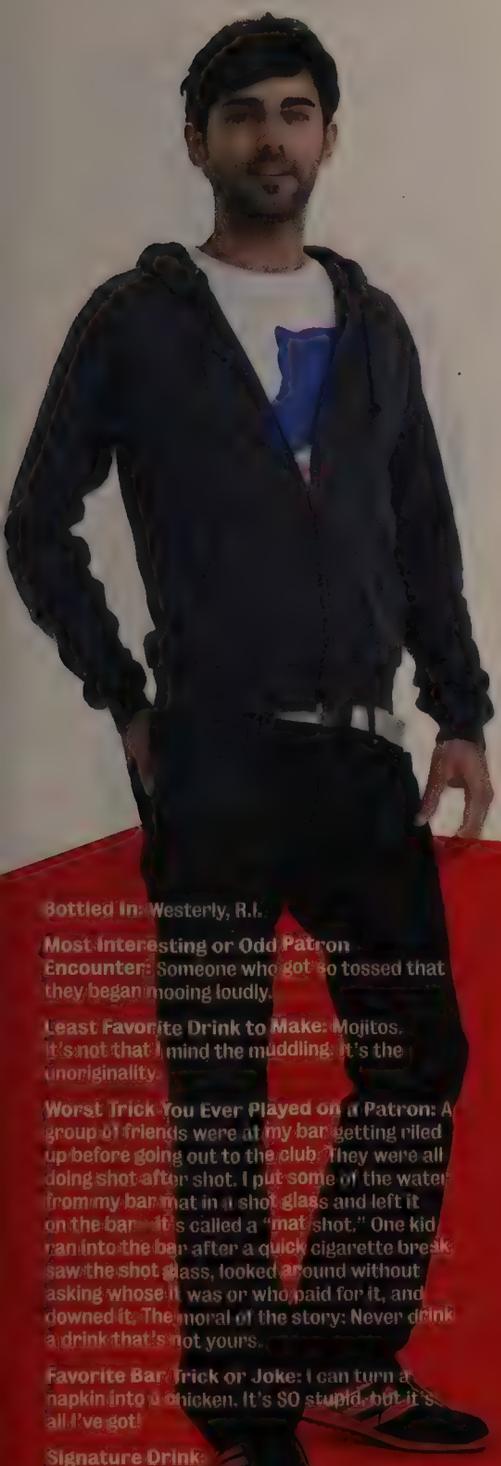
Toro (Thu., Sat.–Mon.) 1704 Washington St., Boston (617-536-4300) toro-restaurant.com



Bottled In: Westerly, R.I.

Most Interesting or Odd Patron Encounter: Someone who got so tossed that they began mooing loudly.

Least Favorite Drink to Make: Mojitos. It's not that I mind the muddling. It's the unoriginality.

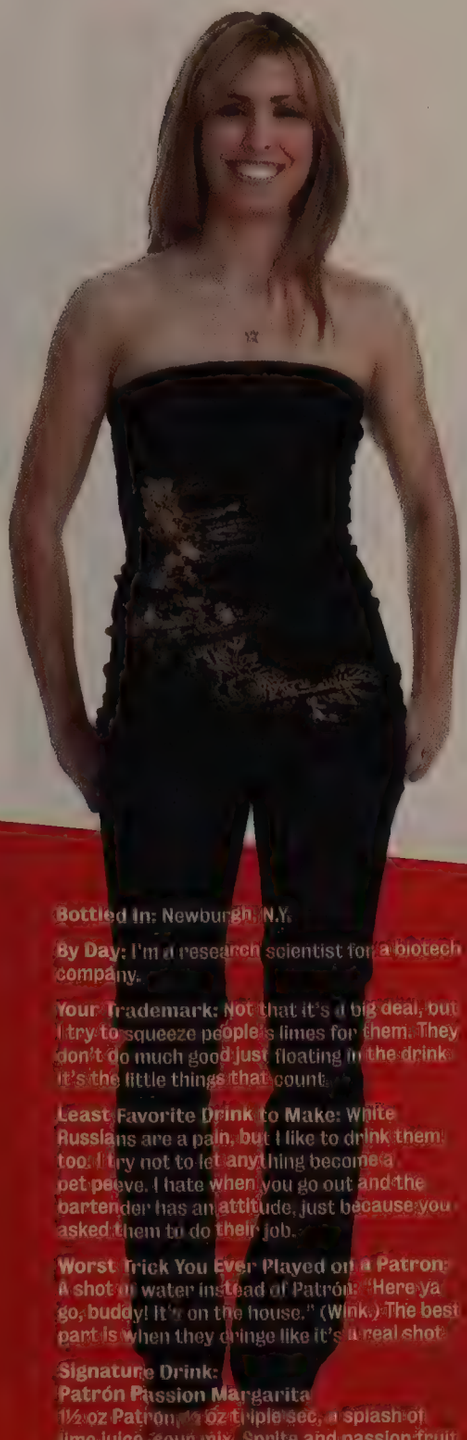
Worst Trick You Ever Played on a Patron: A group of friends were at my bar getting riled up before going out to the club. They were all doing shot after shot. I put some of the water from my bar mat in a shot glass and left it on the bar. It's called a "mat shot." One kid ran into the bar after a quick cigarette break, saw the shot glass, looked around without asking whose it was or who paid for it, and downed it. The moral of the story: Never drink a drink that's not yours.

Favorite Bar Trick or Joke: I can turn a napkin into a chicken. It's SO stupid, but it's all I've got!

Signature Drink:
Verdad y Amor
2 oz hibiscus tea (house infused), Milagro Silver Tequila, 1 oz ginger simple syrup, 1 oz lime juice, 1 oz Cointreau. Shake with ice and pour into a ginger salt–rimmed glass.

Trisha Fremgen

The Estate (Fri., Sat. and special events) 1 Boylston Place, Boston (617-351-7000) theestateboston.com



Bottled In: Newburgh, N.Y.

By Day: I'm a research scientist for a biotech company.

Your Trademark: Not that it's a big deal, but I try to squeeze people's limes for them. They don't do much good just floating in the drink. It's the little things that count.

Least Favorite Drink to Make: White Russians are a pain, but I like to drink them too. I try not to let anything become a pet peeve. I hate when you go out and the bartender has an attitude, just because you asked them to do their job.

Worst Trick You Ever Played on a Patron: A shot of water instead of Patrón: "Here ya go, buddy! It's on the house." (Wink.) The best part is when they cringe like it's a real shot.

Signature Drink:
Patrón Passion Margarita
1½ oz Patrón, ½ oz triple sec, a splash of lime juice, sour mix, Sprite and passion fruit juice. Pour ingredients over ice, shake and serve straight up. Garnish with a lime—and squeeze it!

Bill Codman

Gaslight (Mon.–Sat.) 560 Harrison Ave., Boston (617-422-0224) gaslight560.com

Bottled In: Boston and raised in England.

Most Interesting or Odd Patron Encounter: The South End is full of crackpots. That's what makes it interesting.

Least Favorite Drink to Make: Sour apple martini

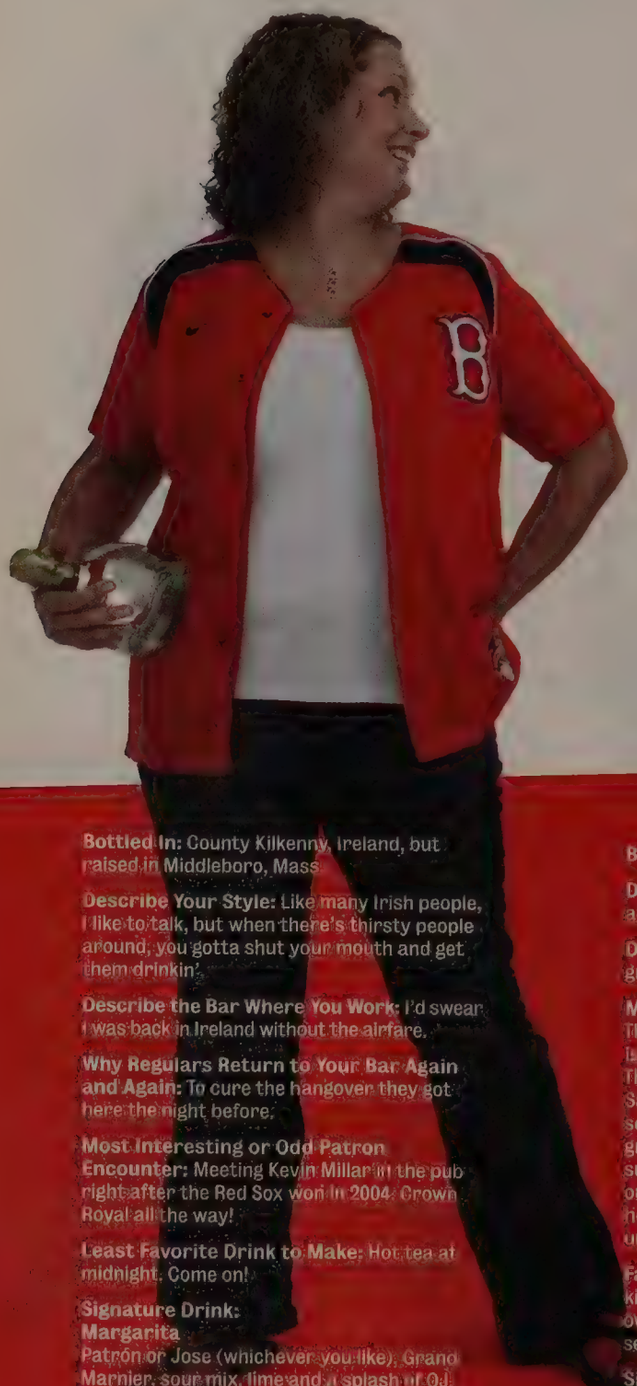
Favorite Bar Trick or Joke: "What's the difference between jam and marmalade?" You'll have to come in and ask me for the answer.

Personal Policy on Dating Customers: I plead the Fifth.

Signature Drink:
Five Grape Fizz
Muddle five white grapes in a highball glass. Add 1½ oz Ciroc Vodka and ½ oz Martilde Peach. Fill a glass with ice and top.

Olive Stapleton

M.J. O'Connors (Wed., Fri., Sat. and Thu. days) 27 Columbus Ave., Boston (617-482-2255) mjoconnorsboston.com



Bottled In: County Kilkenny, Ireland, but raised in Middleboro, Mass.

Describe Your Style: Like many Irish people, I like to talk, but when there's thirsty people around, you gotta shut your mouth and get them drinkin'.

Describe the Bar Where You Work: I'd swear I was back in Ireland without the airfare.

Why Regulars Return to Your Bar Again and Again: To cure the hangover they got here the night before.

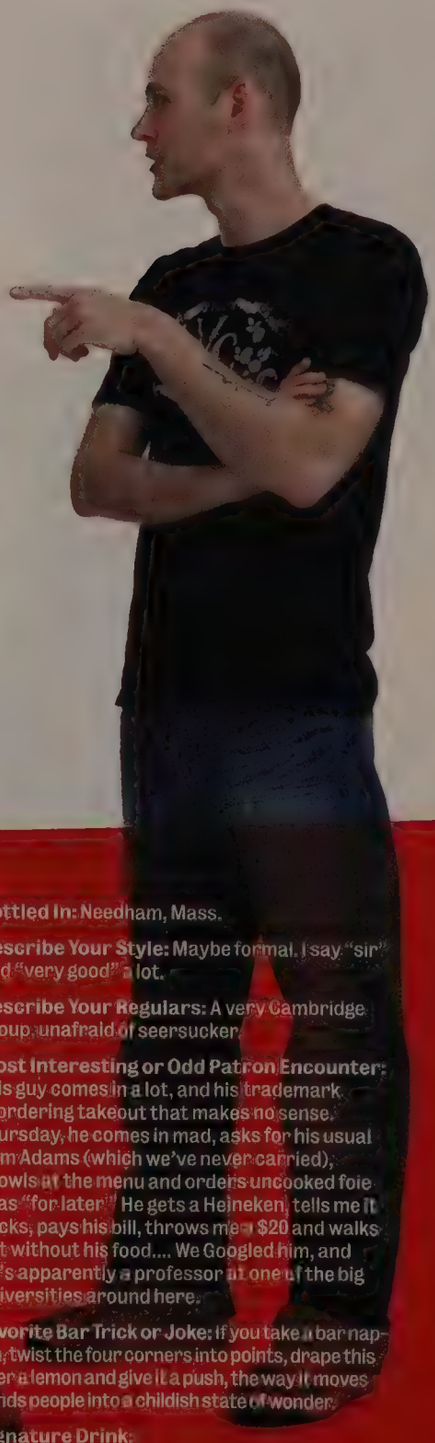
Most Interesting or Odd Patron Encounter: Meeting Kevin Millar in the pub right after the Red Sox won in 2004. Crown Royal all the way!

Least Favorite Drink to Make: Hot tea at midnight. Come on!

Signature Drink:
Margarita
Patrón or Jose (whichever you like), Grand Marnier, sour mix, lime and a splash of OJ. Shake the hell out of it. Fill a 16-oz glass with ice, pour in your shot of tequila and then add equal parts of everything else.

Rob Kraemer

Chez Henri (Wed.–Fri.) 1 Shepard St., Cambridge (617-354-8980) chezhenri.com



Bottled In: Needham, Mass.

Describe Your Style: Maybe formal. I say "sir" and "very good" a lot.

Describe Your Regulars: A very Cambridge group, unafraid of seersucker.

Most Interesting or Odd Patron Encounter: This guy comes in a lot, and his trademark is ordering takeout that makes no sense. Thursday, he comes in mad, asks for his usual Sam Adams (which we've never carried), scowls at the menu and orders uncooked foie gras "for later." He gets a Heineken, tells me it sucks, pays his bill, throws me a $20 and walks out without his food.... We Googled him, and he's apparently a professor at one of the big universities around here.

Favorite Bar Trick or Joke: If you take a bar napkin, twist the four corners into points, drape this over a lemon and give it a push, the way it moves sends people into a childish state of wonder.

Signature Drink:
The Lamplighter
2 oz Wild Turkey, ¾ oz celery juice, ½ oz lemon juice, ¼ oz simple syrup. Shake well, and serve up in a cocktail glass with a lemon twist.

Gene Roundtree

Audubon Circle (Thu., Sat. and occasionally Tue.) 838 Beacon St., Boston (617-421-1910) audubooncircle.us

Bottled In: Morristown, N.J. ("I'm Jersey and proud of it!")

By Day: I'm a biology teacher at a public school in Boston, but next year I'll be a full-time student at Harvard's Graduate School of Education.

Most Interesting or Odd Patron Encounter: A patron once offered me a job editing a humor magazine.

Favorite Bar Trick or Joke: I have a couple of tricks that I like—one uses a principle I teach in my chemistry class and one is a puzzle that involves four straws.

Best Tip You Ever Received: A foul ball from Game 1 of the World Series last year.

Signature Drink:
Kiwi-Cucumber Gimlet
3 cucumber slices and half a kiwi muddled together, ¾ oz lime juice, ¾ oz simple syrup, 3 oz Hendrick's Gin. Shake vigorously, double strain into a martini glass. Garnish with a cucumber slice.

Caitlin Driscoll

The Draft (Fri., Sat. and random shifts during the week) 34 Harvard St., Allston (617-783-9400)

Bottled In: Fall River, Mass.

Best Way to Handle a Drunk: If you can't beat 'em, join 'em!

Least Favorite Drink to Make: Car Bombs, only because the curdled milk is gross to clean up.

Best Way to Get Your Attention: Offer to buy me a shot.

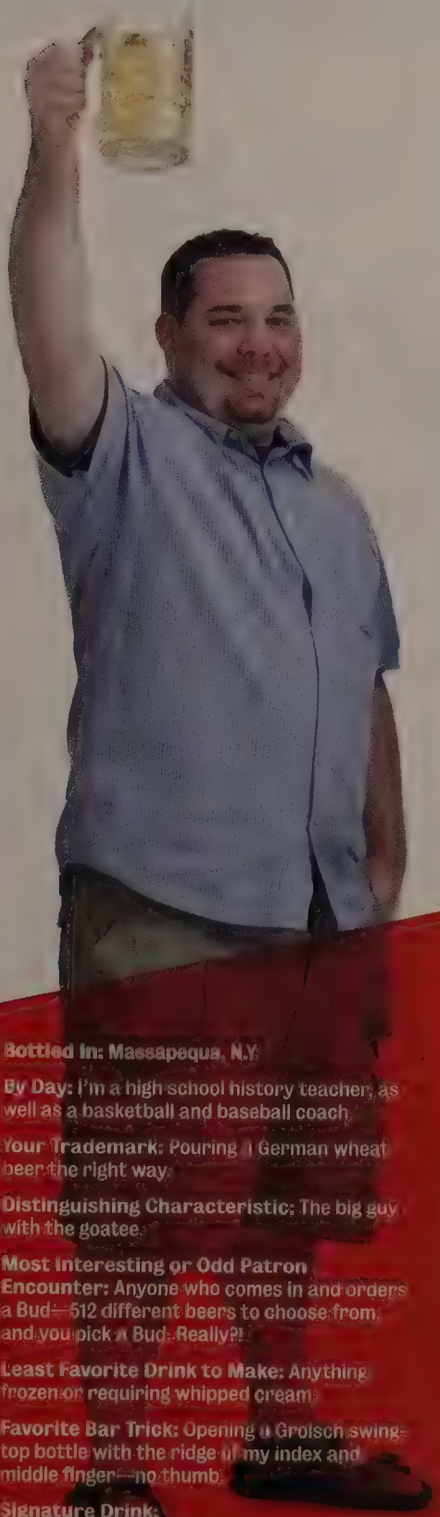
Personal Policy on Dating Customers: Probably not a great idea, especially since the one time I did, the guy took me to the Squire in Revere.

Hangover Cure: McDonald's, Anna's or Kelly's. Or start drinking again.

Signature Drink:
Bazooka Joe
Bacardi Limón with a splash of grenadine in a shot glass. Drop into a tall glass of Red Bull.

Patrick Salvato

Sunset Grill and Tap (Fri., June–November and various shifts throughout the year) 130 Brighton Ave., Allston (617-254-1331) allstonsfinest.com



Bottled In: Massapequa, N.Y.

By Day: I'm a high school history teacher, as well as a basketball and baseball coach.

Your Trademark: Pouring a German wheat beer the right way.

Distinguishing Characteristic: The big guy with the goatee.

Most Interesting or Odd Patron Encounter: Anyone who comes in and orders a Bud—512 different beers to choose from, and you pick a Bud. Really?!

Least Favorite Drink to Make: Anything frozen or requiring whipped cream.

Favorite Bar Trick: Opening a Grolsch swing-top bottle with the ridge of my index and middle finger—no thumb.

Signature Drink:
Dirty Hoe
One part Lindeman's Framboise Raspberry Lambic, three parts Hoegaarden Belgian White.

Christina Zervanos

Banq (Fri.–Mon.) 1375 Washington St., Boston (617-451-0077) banqrestaurant.com

Bottled In: Philadelphia.

Describe the Bar Where You Work: Sleek and sexy, with soaring and undulating ceilings. It's architecturally mesmerizing.

Worst Trick You Ever Played on a Patron: A customer asked the lounge waitress to order him whatever drink made my boobs shake (meaning a muddled drink). I told her to tell him he could have a beer.

Best Tip You Ever Received: $1,000 when I worked at Mantra.

Best Way to Get Your Attention: Eye contact. Smile. Don't whistle at me—I'm not a dog.

Signature Drink:
Z-Tini
2 parts tequila, 1 part triple sec and chili mango liqueur, a splash of O.J. Shake and serve straight up with an orange twist.

Bottled In: County Wexford, Ireland.

Describe Your Regulars: They're always up for a good laugh.

Best Way to Get Your Attention: A nice smile.

Best Tip You Ever Received: I'm still waiting.

Signature Drink:
Strawberries and Champagne
Muddle fresh strawberries. Add 1 oz Bacardi Razz, 1 oz Absolut Pear, a splash of orange, cranberry and pineapple juices. Shake on ice and strain into a cocktail glass. Top with champagne.

Bottled In: Lexington, Mass.

Most Interesting or Odd Patron Encounter: A sleep-deprived patron once asked me for a glass of water and was convinced I drugged her because the water was red. She called the police. She was so out of it, she didn't realize that the water was in a red plastic glass. The police took her away in an ambulance.

Least Favorite Drink to Make: Frozen daiquiri.

Worst Trick You Ever Played on a Patron: Giving last call an hour early, because I wasn't aware of [the switch to] Daylight Savings Time.

Best Way to Get Your Attention: A low-cut top or cash.

Hangover Cure: Tripe.

Signature Drink:
Blonde Sidecar
2 oz Remy Grand Cru, 1 oz St-Germain Elderflower Liqueur, ½ oz simple syrup, 1 oz water, 2 orange wedges, 3 lemon wedges. Muddle, chill and serve straight up in a sugar-rimmed cocktail glass.

Bottled In: "Good Ol' Cape Cod," Mass.

By Day: I'm earning a BFA in graphic design along with doing some modeling.

Most Interesting or Odd Patron Encounter: "Can I have three shots of SoCo Lime, and one shot of water? I have a girl here on antibiotics and I really have to make sure she feels included."

Worst Trick You Ever Played on a Patron: I had a guy asking for five slices of orange every time he ordered a Blue Moon, because he wanted the extra vitamin C. So on the third request, I put a packet of Emergen-C (a 1,000-mg vitamin C supplement that you add to water) into his pint glass instead, and gave it to him fizzing and overflowing.

Favorite Bar Trick or Joke: When customers take their first sip of a drink and throw the straw on the bar, I make sure they get about 10 straws in their glass next time around.

Signature Drink:
The Beamer
1 part Absolut Ruby Red Vodka, 1 part Smirnoff White Grape Vodka. Fill with equal parts seltzer water and sour mix, and a splash of lime and cranberry. Shake once and serve in a pint glass over ice, garnished with an orange twist.

Bottled In: Stafford Springs, Conn.

Describe Your Regulars: They will come in straight off a plane from Beijing or just back from a weekend in New York where they met the Rolling Stones.

Most Interesting or Odd Patron Encounter: There was this guy who came in from the Bahamas. He gave us $1,000 in cash and told us to keep a tab open for the weekend. He only drank Dark and Stormys.

Hangover Cure: Dill pickles and a Red Bull.

Drink of Choice: Absinthe or anything with bubbles.

Signature Drink:
The Orange Line
2 dashes house-made blood-orange bitters, ½ oz Creole Shrub, 2 oz citrus vodka and 1 oz freshly squeezed blood-orange juice (with pulp). Shake and serve straight up in a cocktail glass. Garnish with an orange slice.

Bottled In: Colorado.

By Day: I'm an architect intern and working towards my master's in architecture.

Describe the Bar Where You Work: The Achilles Project is a new concept. It's a clothing boutique/lounge/restaurant. We have Nintendo Wii and Guitar Hero to play while you enjoy cocktails.

Most Interesting or Odd Patron Encounter: I always enjoy watching people actually break a sweat playing Wii.

Favorite Bar Trick or Joke: "Chris... what's that beer we have on tap... starts with a 'P'"?

Best Tip You Ever Received: A Starbucks card. Nothing says gratuity like fresh brewed coffee!

Signature Drink:
The Gin and Jazz
2 oz Hendrick's Gin, 1 oz dry vermouth, 1 oz jasmine tea, cucumber, lemon, lime and simple syrup. Muddle cucumber, lemon and lime with simple syrup. Strain into a shaker with the gin, vermouth and tea over ice. Shake and serve straight up in a martini glass with a cucumber garnish.

Most Interesting or Odd Patron Encounter: We had one guest come in and start ripping apart our recent renovations and putting the place down for being "way too feminine." I said I was sorry to hear he didn't like the new look and then asked him what he wanted to drink. His response was: "A chocolate martini with extra Godiva." (For the record, the new look is beautiful.)

Favorite Bar Trick or Joke: I enjoy pretending the remote is broken when asked to change the channel from the Stanley Cup playoffs to game 11 in a 160-game Red Sox season.

Best Tip You Ever Received: A copy of Dr. Paul Farmer's book Pathologies of Power, and I still can't get over it.

Personal Policy on Dating Customers: I don't have a policy, but approach this with extreme caution, especially when your bar happens to be in a hotel.

Signature Drink:
Strawberry–Rhubarb Pisco Concoction
Per 750 ml of Pisco, you need 1 large stalk of rhubarb, chopped up, and an equal amount of strawberries. Bake them with sugar until soft, then put them in a glass container. Pour in the Pisco, cover and refrigerate, and (if possible) wait more than a week. Add 1 oz Moscato D'Asti to 2 oz of the strawberry-rhubarb-infused Pisco. Serve on the rocks in a Burgundy glass, garnished with rhubarb ribbons.

By Day: I work in corporate catering.

Most Interesting or Odd Patron Encounter: There are a lot of strange people out there frequenting bars, so every night has its odd or interesting moments. I think I speak for most bartenders when I say not much surprises me anymore.

Best Way to Handle a Drunk: I keep serving them "mocktails" until their cab arrives. Oops. The secret's out.

Worst Trick You Ever Played on a Patron: My friend Shawna came in for brunch one morning, really hung over, and ordered an ice water with lemon. So I put on my best poker face and served her a great big water glass full of the cheapest bottom-shelf vodka we have, with lots of ice, a straw and a lemon. Naturally, she took it, thanked me and downed half of it before realizing it wasn't water. She had some choice words for me, but I do think she felt a little better afterward.

Best Tip You Ever Received: I'll just say it covered my rent.

Signature Drink:
Adam's South End Mimosa

Most Interesting or Odd Patron Encounter: I saved a man's life once. Oh! And when the drag show nearby lets out, and they come in to do shots of tequila... there was the largest Easter Bunny I've ever seen.

Least Favorite Drink to Make: A wine spritzer. It's just wrong.

Worst Trick You Ever Played on a Patron: It was a regular, of course. I replaced his tequila shot with Mezcal.

Signature Drink:
Pressed Apple Margarita
1 oz Corzo Reposado Tequila, 1 oz St-Germain Elderflower Liqueur, cinnamon simple syrup, dash of sweet vermouth, 2 dashes of bitters. Shake well. Serve straight up, garnished with a cinnamon stick and fresh lime wedge.

DISTILLED WISDOM

Mixologists take drinking seriously.

By Nancy Gaines
Photographs by Alan Gwizdowski

MIXOLOGISTS. PUT ASIDE THE PRETENTIOUSNESS OF THE TERM FOR A MOMENT AND THINK OF THEM AS CELEBRITY CHEFS, WITH A TWIST AND A SPLASH.

Your top-shelf Boston barkeeps are, of course, naturals at keeping the conversation bubbling on every subject from sabermetrics to string theory. But it's on bottle chemistry that mixologists are true brainiacs, dispensing history and lore with each pour. The best boast an encyclopedic recall of hundreds of drink recipes, some dating back 150 years and more. Hence their passion for resurrecting venerable whiskeys. But elite mixologists aren't theoreticians; they're artisans, revitalizing flips and fizzes as they create original, complex cocktails, using homemade infusions and exotic brands like Aperol, St-Germain and other hot bottles.

Like matchmakers, mixologists draw out a customer's preferences, aiming to pair the drinker with the drink. And like chefs, they eschew mixes and machines in favor of fresh ingredients like eggs and orange-blossom water, hand-shaken for as long as 15 minutes. Indeed, behind their appeal is this exquisite attention to the little things. "People respond to the old-school, Gilded Age service," says Lauren Clark, publisher of Drinkboston.com. "It keeps them coming back."

In raising the bar, mixologists have replaced DJs to become the hottest stars on the nightlife scene. They "are to bars what celeb chefs are to a food site," says Charlie Perkins, founder of Boston Restaurant Group, a leading broker. No less an authority than James Meehan, deputy editor of Food & Wine's cocktail book, calls their emergence a "watershed moment" in dining history: "very important, aesthetically, culturally and financially."

Thanks to a handful of these maestro mixologists, the home of the bean and the cod has joined the ranks of the country's cocktail capitals. "In Boston," says Meehan, "the quality of the drinks, the programs and execution are on a par with New York and San Francisco, the leaders in drink culture."

Modern mixologists trace their DNA to Dale DeGroff, the New Yorker known as the "King of Cocktails." Beginning in the 1980s at the fabled Rainbow Room, DeGroff championed retro and custom-made, hand-crafted cocktails. His efforts got a big boost in the 1990s with the advent of premium liquors like vanilla vodkas and sugar cane rums, which distributors pushed on barkeeps, compelling them to get more creative.

"It was a natural progression as restaurants tried to differentiate themselves," says Peter Cipriani, 41, a 15-year veteran and one of the city's top pourers. "Decor only goes so far. Food is a given; if it's not right, there's no point. What's left is service and drinks. And cocktails are like a chemistry set."

Hereabouts, the mixology movement first took root in Cambridge in 1998 with the opening of the B-Side Lounge, a funky bunker where cosmopolites hunker down alongside townies and techies. Brother Cleve, the popular DJ and mixed-drink enthusiast, devised the lounge's cocktail menu, inspired in no small measure by DeGroff's elixirs. Today, B-Side spawn dot the bar scene on both sides of the river.

By the early part of this decade, the demand for chocolate martinis and cloying cosmos was giving way to a more discriminating taste for sour mashes and mojitos. "People became more discerning," says Steve Coyle, who runs Sonsie, Game On! and Kings as the VP of operations for the Lyons Group. "The level of interest in mixology has certainly come to the fore in the past few years."

To wit, Stix Restaurant & Lounge on Stanhope Street has begun marketing itself as a "pioneer" in "molecular mixology," an offshoot of a science-based European gastronomic trend. Their Ten Cane Raspberry Sashimi is actually a gelatinized rum-and-berry puree, served with chopsticks so it can be dipped in flavored sugars.

Though they are both adept at drawing crowds, not all master mixologists are celebrity bartenders, and vice versa. "A mixologist likes exploring the palate and creating new drinks," says Misty Kalkofen of Green Street, "but when we're in the weeds"—and the bar is crowded—a studious mixo "might fall apart." Whereas a simpler, speedy bartender might do fine.

Then you have barman Joe McGuirk, 43, now at Highland Kitchen in Somerville, who is so skilled and popular that his customers often call upon him to open his own place. Yet, McGuirk insists, "I'm a tradesman. Mixologists are artisans."

Three mixologists in town define the whole package—inventive, informed, fast but gracious—with a handful more coming on fast.

Best known, locally and nationally, is John Gertsen, bar manager and principal bartender at Barbara Lynch's No. 9 Park. Gertsen was quoted earlier this year in Parade magazine, demonstrating, for better and for worse, how the trend has penetrated the public consciousness.

Now 37, Gertsen came up through the ranks during the mid-'90s, first at 29 Newbury before moving over to Salamander where he worked for Stan Frankenthaler, a foodie favorite. Gertsen's been in charge of the bar at No. 9 since 2005 and is overseeing those operations at Lynch's forthcoming multiplex on the Fort Point Channel.

"Tending bar is like tending a garden," says Gertsen. "Every seat is a plant, with special needs. There's much more of a human element to mixology than just the drink."

"Tending bar is like tending a garden," says Gertsen. "Every seat is a plant, with special needs. There's much more of a human element to mixology than just the drink."

Bar manager Jackson Cannon of Eastern Standard speaks and consults throughout the United States and has been a "brand ambassador" for major distillers. Son of Lou Cannon, the noted journalist and Ronald Reagan biographer, Cannon, 42, was a professional musician backing the likes of Gatemouth Brown until he segued into managing bars 15 years ago. He has worked at Eastern Standard since it opened in 2005. Cannon's "robust and precise program," a national award–winner from the start, is critical to the success of the bistro, he says, because first-rate mixology is "the only way to get the most discerning demographic." His cocktail list numbers more than 60 and changes four or five times a year.

Across the river, Kalkofen presides over the bar at Green Street, a gastropub with an astonishing list of 100 specialty cocktails. Formerly the Green Street Grill, the near-century-old Cambridge spot was closed, sold and reopened two years ago.

"Our job is to make people comfortable, to create conversation—to be a great bartender," says Kalkofen. "And also to create a drink on a whim, to [meet] their expectations—to be a great mixologist. If they can go out of here feeling better and saying, 'Wow, I just had a great cocktail,' we've won on both fronts, and on both sides of the bar."

The divine Kalkofen, 36, who earned a master's from Harvard Divinity School, is another apostle of Brother Cleve. Indeed, the links among the key places and players are many. B-Side owner Patrick Sullivan begat McGuirk, Cannon, Kalkofen, Dylan Black (owner of Green Street) and Dave Cagle of Deep Ellum. Super-bartender Andy McNees, another B-Side alum who used to work for Cannon, now works for Kalkofen and is house mates with McGuirk.

There's the pretentiousness of it all, "a certain level of arrogance," Kalkofen admits.

"It's incestuous," says Kalkofen of the group, laughing. "We hang together, drink together, share information and contacts." She, Cannon and Cleve even founded the Jack Rose Society (named after a drink they favor), a group of elite bartenders who meet regularly to swap recipes and talk shop.

Not surprisingly, many of the rising mixologists have ties to one another. Tom Schlesinger-Guidelli is a protégé of Cannon. Jonathan Henson, bar manager and principal bartender at Great Bay in the Hotel Commonwealth, says his approach is influenced by observing Gertsen—and reading "tons of books and magazines." Henson, 36, has already had concoctions lauded in local magazines. He recently heard that his Remedy will appear in the 2009 edition of The Bartender's Black Book; his specialty drink, Ghost of Mary, is already on the menu at New York's Prune, the hall of fame for Bloody Marys.

In a business where liquor brings the highest margins, a master mixologist can help restaurateurs realize their goal of a 10 percent profit. Plus, "the bar may be the best opportunity to demonstrate your belief in great food, seasonality and fresh ingredients," says Garrett Harker, owner of Eastern Standard. There, for example, a summer special is the Champion's Cup, a 10-ingredient concoction that includes an infusion of cantaloupe and honeydew melon.

Still, full-scale mixology has its drawbacks. Special equipment, stock and experts are expensive. Confecting drinks with up to eight components is time-consuming. Seasoned owners are wary that barkeeps with lots of friends may mean lots of free drinks.

And there's the pretentiousness of it all, "a certain level of arrogance," Kalkofen admits.

Harker, for one, is well aware of the danger of the cork-dork syndrome. "We're careful to try to keep an equilibrium," he says, slicing it wry. "We have shots on the menu." ✖✖✖

Your Own Personal Jesus

Heaven Can't Wait

The Opera House resurrects the 1973 musical Jesus Christ Superstar May 16–18. One of the world's major religions goes rock 'n' roll in this pop retelling of Jesus' political and personal struggles. With a score by Andrew Lloyd Weber and lyrics by Tim Rice, light is sure to shine down on Ted Neeley in the title role. Amy Gromek

Movies Edited by Nick Altschuller and Amanda Knorr

Baby Mama ★★ ½ Fans of Tina Fey's self-deprecating pratfalls on her terrific sitcom 30 Rock will be surprised at just how stiff and unconvincing she is on the big screen playing straight woman to Amy Poehler's trashy surrogate in this uneven farce from former SNL writer Michael McCullers. No points for guessing that Fey's bland career woman learns to loosen up thanks to Poehler's pee-in-the-sink rambunctiousness, but does the odious legacy of Adam Sandler dictate that every modern comedy starring SNL cast members must end with a schmaltzy courtroom confrontation? Burlington native Poehler gives her all to an erratically written character, but she's more successful in the earlier comedic scenes than the later sappy stuff. Indifferently photographed and poorly staged, the movie remains watchable thanks largely to an overqualified roster of supporting players, especially Sigourney Weaver's condescending executive and a marvelous turn from Steve Martin that's easily the funniest thing he's done in years. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Big Lebowski ★★★★ Closing out the Waltham Embassy Cinema's 10th anniversary celebration is the Coen Brothers' 1998 masterpiece, which initially opened to lukewarm reviews and middling box office returns. This zonked romp through Raymond Chandler detective tropes and assorted other ephemera has built a legendary cult following over the years for one very good reason: It gets funnier every time you watch it. What else can be said about Jeff Bridges' career-topping performance as an unlikely brother shamus, transferring Humphrey Bogart's anti-authoritarian irreverence into a pothead in jelly shoes? There's also John Goodman's half-cocked Vietnam vet, Julianne Moore's pretentious artiste femme fatale, Steve Buscemi's hapless sidekick and, of course, John Turturro as a pederast named Jesus. The shaggy-dog kidnapping plot, involving nihilists who whine because things aren't fair, keeps getting elbowed aside by pertinent distractions like bowling tournaments and directions to the In-N-Out Burger. All these seeming non-sequiturs add up to a movie more politically and philosophically cogent than is visible upon first glance. The Dude abides. (At Waltham Embassy and Brattle Theatre)

88 Minutes ★ ½ First off, they're lying. It's more like 108 minutes, which is far too much time to watch Al Pacino panting and groaning his way through such disposable serial-killer schlock. Directed with staggering incompetence by Fried Green Tomatoes helmer Jon Avnet, the film has been sitting on a shelf for a couple years, but feels even older. Gary Scott Thompson's screenplay rips off every moldy Thomas Harris/Joe Ezsterhas trope imaginable, surrounding Pacino's womanizing forensic psychiatrist with a bevy of babes (Amy Brenneman, Alicia Witt, Deborah Kara Unger and Leelee Sobieski) who may or may not be helping a mad killer (Neal McDonagh) orchestrate his murder from Death Row. The majority of the movie is Pacino talking on the phone while trying to untangle the plot, so the only entertainment is watching him strain to make the nonsense credible with patented Pacino-isms like big hair, bug eyes and a lot of manic gum chewing. He's too old for the role and too good for this movie. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Forgetting Sarah Marshall ★★★ This filthy, winning comedy is the latest from producer Judd Apatow's seemingly inexhaustible well of schlubby guys, impossibly hot women and embarrassing sexual shenanigans. Jason Segel, who also penned the screenplay, stars as a heartbroken lummox running away to Hawaii in the wake of a bad breakup—only to find himself at the same resort as his ex (and her new beau, naturally.) It's a nifty hook, and Segel gets away with some astoundingly dirty jokes by approaching every scene with an almost child-like enthusiasm. His specialty consists of a snark-free delivery that's all the more hilarious for its ardor. Capably, if unexceptionally directed by Nicholas Stoller, Forgetting Sarah Marshall meanders a bit before building to a climax that offers more smiles than belly laughs. But that spirit of affection is what lingers when the lights come up. It's actually a pleasure spending time with these people, which is a rare feeling at the movies these days. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Leatherheads ★★ ½ George Clooney has figured out how to stay old-school in a business that's always chasing the newest trends. How else to explain this defiantly retro football farce loaded with affectionate nods to everything from It Happened One Night to The Keystone Kops? Who else beside Clooney could make such a thing happen? No, the movie doesn't really work, but its heart is in the right place. You find yourself leaning forward, rooting for scenes to succeed even as they fizzle out. Aping the

Iron Man led by Robert Downey Jr.'s magnetism

Iron Man

Starring Robert Downey Jr., Gwyneth Paltrow, Terrence Howard and Jeff Bridges. Screenplay by Mark Fergus, Hawk Ostby, Art Marcum and Matt Holloway. Directed by Jon Favreau. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

"I'M NOT REALLY THE HERO TYPE," quips Robert Downey Jr. with a knowing glint in his eye, late into director Jon Favreau's slyly amusing Iron Man. The moment sums up the picture's off-kilter appeal in a nifty nutshell. The movie itself is well-assembled, fairly standard stuff, and there's not a plot point that won't feel overfamiliar if you've sat through any of the billion or so comic-book adaptations released in the past 10 years. Yet, somehow, Downey's snarky presence as the lead makes it seem like a wonderful act of subversion.

Up until quite recently, the idea of this mercurial, ridiculously entertaining but deeply troubled actor headlining a mega-budget franchise would be beyond anyone's imagination. The past decade was a rough, tabloid-friendly time for Downey, and I found myself writing preemptive obits for him more than once.

But a wonderful thing happened: He straightened out. Still finding himself unemployed and uninsurable, it took a generous assist from his good friend (and no stranger to demons) Mel Gibson to coerce Hollywood executives into taking a second chance on Downey's quicksilver line readings.

Kiss Kiss Bang Bang, 2005's instantaneous cult classic, produced by Gibson's old buddy Joel Silver and helmed by Lethal Weapon scribe Shane Black, was Downey's equivalent of Elvis' '68 Comeback Special. A screwball noir that zigzags from snark to pathos and back again, the movie rests almost entirely on Downey's bratty, brilliant persona.

And now he's gone and become a superhero. Your typical origins story, for all intents and purposes, Iron Man makes oft-trod ground feel fresh simply because the star brings his own hefty baggage on board.

Downey is Tony Stark, a genius inventor hitting the dark side of 40, still squandering his gifts on massive military contracts and distracting himself by going "12 for 12" with Maxim cover models.

Scotch in hand, quip at the ready, Stark boozes his way through Afghanistan oblivious to human suffering. It's not till his convoy is ambushed by the Taliban (whoops, in the movie they're called "The 10 Rings") with missiles bearing his company logo that Stark begins to wake up and smell the weapons of mass destruction.

It's hard to complain about this level of competence and professionalism in a summer blockbuster, even if you know these people have more to offer.

In keeping with Marvel scribe Stan Lee's genius for gimcrack allegory, Stark's change of heart is quite literal: His aorta has been riddled with shrapnel, so an electromagnet pulsing near his chest is the only thing keeping him alive. Stark takes his new cybernetic existence to the next logical step by rallying all his skill to create a shiny, hot-rod, super-duper robot suit and flying across the globe on a one-man mission to wipe out (his own) WMDs.

This is, of course, a glorious liberal fantasy. It's hard not to thrill to the sight of a war profiteer growing a conscience, turning on the military-industrial complex and choosing to serve the greater good. (How amusing that the original comic took place during Vietnam, and yet so little had to be changed for this modern adaptation.) But, speaking the carefully neutral language of blockbuster movies, Iron Man backs away from pesky geopolitics and settles into a somewhat tedious, homegrown battle between Downey and his corporate father-figure, played by a burly, bald-headed Jeff Bridges with such back-slapping brio that you know from the start he's gonna turn out to be evil.

Iron Man winds up playing it safe and hitting all the expected, crowd-pleasing beats. This is somewhat dispiriting, as Favreau's debut feature, Made, might be the pushiest, most confrontational comedy of the past 10 years. But it's hard to complain about this level of competence and professionalism in a summer blockbuster, even if you know these people have a lot more to offer.

In the end, the movie works best if you consider it as an outsized, mythological chronicle of its own star's redemption—one of those pop artifacts in which celebrities comment on themselves and their careers. (Like Lindsay Lohan's I Know Who Killed Me, except not horrible.) We root for Stark to succeed because we're already rooting for Downey to do the same.

The actor's priceless exit line offers something extra—a prankish gauntlet thrown down to upend genre conventions and acknowledge that they've gotten all of the boring stuff out of the way: "Wait until you see the inevitable sequel."

I'll be there. ✖✖✖

rat-a-tat dialogue rhythms of His Girl Friday, Clooney (who also produced and directed) bats zingers back and forth with Renée Zellweger's lady reporter at breakneck speed. They're more than capable of firing off the tongue-twisters, but everything gets gummed up in the editing. Clooney's aspiring to the screwball tone of '30s comedy, but the film has been cut at a much slower, more modern pace. Unfortunately, there's too much air between the lines to build any momentum. (In the suburbs.)

The Life Before Her Eyes ★ More ghoulish misery porn from director Vadim Perelman, whose similarly highfalutin', oppressive House of Sand and Fog was one of the more unintentionally hilarious dramas in recent years. Based on a novel by Laura Kasiskchke, this pile of soft-focus suffering stars Uma Thurman as a whimpering survivor of a Columbine-style massacre, sniffling her way through the event's 15th anniversary. Clumsy flashbacks follow Thurman's tarty younger self (Evan Rachel Wood) in a few teenybopper misadventures with her evangelical, goody-goody best friend (Eva Amurri) as the shadow of tasteless, glossy slaughter looms large. The shockeroo plot twist is telegraphed almost from the outset, with Perelman piling on inadvertently comic, wildly pretentious hints along the way. It's the kind of movie in which time-lapse nature photography is supposed to impart depth, with plenty of ponderous classroom speeches about ossification and evaporation drowning in sophomoric water metaphors. Not as laugh-out-loud incompetent as Sand And Fog, but still a waste of time. (At Boston Common and Waltham Embassy.)

Mister Lonely ★★ ½ Former bad-boy audience-abuser Harmony Korine, who famously penned the icky screenplay for Kids as a teen before terrorizing art house patrons with Gummo and Julien Donkey-Boy, has actually made a movie that's sort of sweet. A down-on-his-luck Michael Jackson impersonator (a baby-faced Diego Luna, busting some impressive moves) is recruited by Samantha Morton's Marilyn Monroe wannabe to join a Scottish farm commune populated entirely by lost souls pretending to be their favorite superstars. Under the tutelage of Denis Lavant's ill-tempered Charlie Chaplin, unconvincing replicas of Sammy Davis Jr., Madonna and the Three Stooges attempt to support themselves by putting on talent shows. A parallel storyline stars Werner Herzog as a drunken missionary pilot whose mission is interrupted by the discovery that nuns can fly. It's all too twee and self-conscious for its own good, but Korine lingers on the strange iconography until these incongruous images become weirdly moving. (At Kendall Square.)

Persepolis ★★★½ Buoyant and irreverent, Marjane Satrapi's best-selling coming-of-age comic book memoir springs to life as the simplicity of black-and-white line drawings trump the computer-generated marvels we've grown accustomed to. Growing up as an outspoken female in Iran sounds like the formula for a movie far less lively, but the tone boasts a sardonic wit matching that of its spitfire heroine. (No surprise then that Satrapi directed the film along with French animator Vincent Paronnaud.) Her childhood memories of the Shah's fall and the subsequent rise of Islamic fundamentalism offer a refreshing, humanistic point of view on Middle Eastern history. Young Satrapi's punk-rock attitude and black-market Iron Maiden cassettes lead to a brief exile in Vienna before she returns and, quite movingly, attempts to assimilate into a culture where she's no longer welcome. Persepolis is funny, rambling and sad, and a welcome reminder that stubborn individualism can be found where we least expect it. (In the suburbs.)

Redbelt ★★ David Mamet's chest-thumping mannerisms finally calcify into self-parody in this occasionally bonkers martial arts saga. The great Chiwetel Ejiofor stars as a monk-ish proprietor of a struggling jujitsu academy. He's an almost comically messianic character who speaks exclusively in aphorisms, and only Ejiofor's natural grace keeps the audience from rolling their eyes. Beset on all sides by corrosive Hollywood phonies (including the surprisingly OK Tim Allen), crooked fight promoters and shrill, turncoat women, Ejiofor's tedious bea-con of purity navigates a klutzy maze of double-crosses that feels like Mamet leafing through his greatest-hits catalog. But the labyrinthine plot is more implausible and less inventive than we've come to expect from him. Worse, his staccato profanities aren't even particularly quotable this time around. Even the trademark misogyny seems half-hearted. What's left is Mamet's puzzlingly earnest adoration of a modern man living his life according to ancient warrior codes. It's like Jim Jarmusch's Ghost Dog, only without the jokes. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Shine a Light★★★ What was once rebellious eventually becomes part of the establishment. This isn't a slight, just a simple fact of life, and it's one that Martin Scorsese seems to have grown comfortable with, judging from his exu-berant, if inessential, Rolling Stones concert documentary. Having enlisted an army of the world's most formidable cinematographers, in-cluding Children of Men's Emmanuel Lubeszki, There Will Be Blood's Robert Elswit and even Gimme Shelter's Albert Maysles, Scorsese has 17 cameras trained closely on the action. Shot over two nights at New York's Beacon Theatre in the fall of 2006, the concert is a mixed bag. "Jumpin' Jack Flash," "Satisfaction" and es-pecially that tedious Microsoft anthem, "Start Me Up," are rote at best. But Shine a Light discovers magic in lesser-known tracks from Exile on Main St. and Some Girls, often captur-ing intimate onstage moments as Mick and the boys seem to truly enjoy playing the numbers they aren't forced to perform every damn night. (In the suburbs.)

Stop-Loss ★★ ½ A benevolent muddle, writer-director Kimberly Pierce's long-awaited follow-up to 1999's Boys Don't Cry stars Ryan Phillippe as a decorated soldier who, upon returning home to Texas, discovers he's been back-door drafted into serving another tour in Iraq. Kudos to Pierce and company for attempting to portray the often shameful treatment of our men and women in uniform, but once Phillippe goes AWOL and hits the road with his best friend's girl (Abbie Cornish), the movie alternates awk-wardly between gritty verisimilitude and tacky Hollywood plot twists. Pierce has a genuine feel for the rhythms and details of small-town life and draws strong performances from Phillippe, Channing Tatum and especially Joseph Gordon-Levitt as battle-weary young grunts. But the melodramatic framework too often begs for credulity—with stock characters like Timothy Olyphant's moustache-twirling Army honcho and Josef Sommer's sinister senator undercut-ting the realism of the movie's better scenes. The screenplay (by Pierce and Mark Richard) feels as if it's been worked over by a committee. (In the suburbs.)

Street Kings ★★ With angst-ridden, alcoholic peace officers surrounded by sleaze and system-atic corruption, David Ayer's slick, egregiously miscast sophomore directorial effort will be old hat to anyone who's ever stayed up tearing through a James Ellroy paperback. It'll feel even more familiar to anybody who saw Ellroy and Ayer's 2003 collaboration, Dark Blue, as Street Kings offers the exact same storyline. But where the previous picture featured Kurt Russell's career performance as a crooked cop growing a conscience, the latest spin puts Keanu Reeves in his place—hardly a fair trade. Ayer penned Training Day, helmed the unpleasant Christian Bale dud Harsh Times and obviously enjoys wallowing in knuckleheaded machismo with-out having anything particularly interesting or relevant to say about it. The déjà vu isn't helped by flat staging, claustrophobic compositions and numerous scenes in which everyone stands around explaining the plot when they should just be shooting each other. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

21 ★ ½ The local legend about the MIT stu-dents who made a fortune counting cards gets the glossy big-screen treatment. Across the Universe's simpering Jim Sturgess stars as a gullible math whiz named Ben Campbell (Jeff Ma in real life; gee, I wonder why they changed that?) who's seduced by his slick professor (Kevin Spacey) into spending weekends bringing down the house in Sin City. Screenwriters Peter Steinfeld and Allan Loeb employ every tired cliché, and romantic comedy director Robert Luketic keeps the pace moving at such a crawl that you're always half an hour ahead of the characters. Sturgess is an empty vessel, conjuring zero chemistry with love interest Kate Bosworth. Spacey phones in his tired snide scoundrel routine, while Laurence Fishburne hams it up as a casino security expert. Shot in hi-def video, the movie often appears smeared and out of focus, neon lights blurring together like the indistinct characters. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Visitor ★★★ ½ Wonderful character actor Richard Jenkins finally gets a chance to shine as a leading man in writer-director Tom McCarthy's warm, beautifully understated New York story. Jenkins stars as a gruff, emotionally constipated college professor who strikes up an unlikely friendship with a Syrian immigrant (Haaz Sleiman) and begins to reconnect with his better self, finally venturing out in bustling Greenwich Village and even learning how to play the African drum. As in his delightful debut film, The Station Agent, McCarthy demonstrates a rare gift for observing behavior, allowing his characters to grow and letting their silences speak volumes. But just when you're settling in for yet another "white guy learns a lesson from minorities" homily, the film takes a sharp left turn into darker waters. Without getting preachy, the movie paints a vivid portrait of a post-9/11 America governed by confusion and fear. McCarthy never pushes the material, shrewdly understanding that Jenkins' sad eyes can tell the whole story. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

KT Tunstall plays the Orpheum Theatre May 27.

CAMPFIRE GIRL

KT Tunstall channels her inner hippie through a pop-hero prism.

Barrie Thompson

MAYBE YOU CAN'T JUDGE A BOOK BY ITS COVER. But KT Tunstall strikes quite the pose on the cover of her sophomore outing Drastic Fantastic. The eco-friendly folk-pop singer sports a white mini-dress and ankle boots, cocks a knee and wields an imposing, mirror-encrusted electric guitar.

In turn, while the disc closes with subdued, beguiling songs more in line with Tunstall's 2006 breakthrough debut Eye to the Telescope, it's front-loaded with big, shiny tunes that reflect fuller production and more of a rock feel. "I have a penchant for a pop melody," says the Scottish singer-songwriter, "and that's going to come through no matter what kind of style I adopt for a record."

comic-book images in the pages of the CD booklet. The inspiration for the design and feel of the whole thing, Tunstall explains, was Robert Rodriguez's graphic film adaptation of Sin City.

"I'd seen that [movie] on a plane flying from one crazy place to another and it just really spoke to me of that kind of thrill of it all, where you're on this knife edge of peril all the time," she says, relating it to her platinum career trajectory, launched with key TV performances. "If I'd been really shit, then that might not have happened. It's this momentary gamble that goes on all the time, and it really felt like a comic-book existence."

The thrill of the road clearly agrees with the 32-year-old performer. "I really love the sort of hobo existence of a touring musician," Tunstall says from a hotel in Ipswich, England, before a U.S. tour that hits the Orpheum May 27. "That can translate to the creative side where simplicity is really liberating when it comes to music."

She raises a favorite memory of an early gig where the stage lighting died. "Everyone had a little candle on their table, so we got everyone to bring their little candle up and line them along the front of the stage. It was really magical. You're more inventive with the less you have."

In that spirit, Tunstall and her band have embarked on what she calls the Campfire Tour, inspired by performances she filmed in an Oxfordshire field owned by Blur bassist Alex James and seen on a DVD in the deluxe version of Drastic Fantastic. "It was really fulfilling to strip back with no electric instruments," she says, noting the musicians hid microphones in their scarves and sweaters. "We showcase the tunes on this album in a way that would be more akin to the old record, because my roots are always going to be based in folk."

Barrie Thompson

The Campfire approach will apply to everything—from the new tribal stomp "Hold On" to the old fave "Black Horse and the Cherry Tree." Tunstall long performed the latter solo with only her acoustic guitar, a tambourine and looping effects that allow her to build her "Woo-hoo" to a feverish pitch.

"You have to keep freshening things up if you're playing the same song," she says, adding of the hit that even earned an American Idol turn by finalist Katharine McPhee, "'Black Horse' is going to be quite a treat actually. We've really shaken that one up."

Tunstall credits her rural upbringing outside St. Andrews, Scotland, for her rustic aesthetic, describing her academic parents as "pretty frugal" and "not very materialistic."

"When I was 17, I went over to the States and I was living with a good-looking hippie and his mother up in the hills of Vermont," she adds. "They didn't have electricity. They had a generator in the garden that they'd turn on for an hour and we'd use organic shampoo in the pond in the summer. And it really felt fulfilling; it felt right."

The singer still doesn't own a car, tries to keep "carbon neutral" through the planting of thousands of trees on her behalf and ran her tour buses on biodiesel fuel until recent research suggested that it wasn't so sensible.

"It's such a learning process," she says of environmental efforts, sharing one recent discovery: recycled packaging that contains seeds. "So at the end of the day, when all is said and done, your CD package is going to grow."

Talk about making pop both disposable and sustainable. ✖✖✖

Message in a Bottle

Addiction is never a pretty picture, whether it's heroin or stiletto heels. But Pulitzer Prize–winning author Franz Wright has turned his battles into a collection of poems. In God's Silence, the Brandeis professor reflects on his time spent addicted to drugs and alcohol while trying to maintain his faith. Wright enables verse lovers at Brookline Booksmith on May 26.

Rockie Horoscope { ROCKIE GARDINER }

SEEING DOUBLE

[MAY 21–JUNE 20]
Some Twins get a chance to repair their image when bold, independent-minded Mars moves out of protective Cancer, where it's been stuck for ages—well, for seven long months anyway—focusing on money matters. No longer will you find handy excuses to moan and groan about your cash flow. While the red planet is in fiery Leo, you'll have more opportunities to radiate warmth, strut your stuff and pick up a tab or two. But this golden age won't last past June, so if you want to entertain and be entertained in return, do it soon.

CANCER [June 21–July 22]
It might not be the last of the generous gifts you'll receive for a while, but after the Taurus sun and benevolent Jupiter end their rewarding trine relationship and Jupiter turns retrograde in your Capricorn house of allies, the "easy come, easy go" flow of goodies could slow down for the summer. Associates are especially willing to lend their support right now, but if you're going to be sharing resources, double-check the validity of their offer before you sign on. Fanciful Neptune could be clouding that issue.

LEO [July 23–August 22]
Mixed signals from someone wielding financial clout can make what actually happens this month more confusing than it need be. While you might agree with the values this paragon of practicality personifies and appreciate the enthusiasm your coworkers offer, idealistic Neptune in your partnership house may harbor a different agenda. It wouldn't hurt to stop what you're doing and question your partners' motives. After years having elusive Neptune in your Aquarius complement, you should be used to its misinterpretations and obfuscations.

VIRGO [August 23–September 22]
Just when most of the other signs are preparing for their summer break, Virgins are getting ready to hear from your Mercury ruler as it transits your Gemini career zone. Don't stray too far from the phone and don't slack off on your current project, because Mercury will be turning retrograde on Memorial Day for three weeks of "How big a mess will the Messenger make this time?" If you need to stock up on supplies, replace tires and brakes, or confirm reservations, now is the time. Be the Boy Scout: Be prepared.

LIBRA [September 23–October 22]
The well-worn image of Libra as the iron fist in the velvet glove may have described your behavior during the last seven months, but now that headstrong Mars has finally left your Cancer career house, you can relax. While the Red Planet passes through sunny Leo, you're likely to adopt more of a "que sera, sera" attitude about the projects you've been pushing and the people you've been courting. Without expending undue effort, your Venus ruler in fertile Taurus finds support, i.e. ideas, enthusiasm and seed money, from disparate sources.

SCORPIO [October 23–November 21]
Until solar Taurus ends on May 20, you may have to put up with a manageable, albeit annoying amount of stress coming at you from people you partner with. One of your significant others could be unrealistically optimistic and, without meaning to, push those security-conscious Scorpio buttons. Another might appear to be too easily influenced, thereby setting you to wonder if his or her opinion can be trusted. This is especially true when making a decision about an addition to the household. Artsy-fartsy doesn't cut it.

SAGITTARIUS [November 22–December 21] Let's hope you used your much-admired Sagittarian foresight to clip last week's forecast. This way you'll be able to refer to where pesky Mercury is headed this summer and when its meanderings will have an effect on pertinent relationships with your supporters as well as your competitors. Writers are always in thrall to the Messenger's fluctuating moods, so if the thought of another retrograde period puts you off, remember that those are the best weeks for editing and rewriting with clarity.

CAPRICORN [December 22–January 20]
It works both ways. After feisty Mars leaves your Cancer marriage house, the person on the other side of the table won't be quite as irritating. By the same token, you won't be such a thorn in his or her side either. Arguments you were eager to engage in may fade as Mars transits through Leo's bright, shiny aura. Take advantage of this happy interlude. Once independent-minded Mars enters discerning Virgo on July 1 and meets up with your demanding Saturn ruler soon after, that assertive mindset is likely to kick in again.

AQUARIUS [January 21–February 18]
It's the artistic side of the Water-Bearer that's in demand, not the rational thinker. That's because the sun and lovable Venus are in Taurus, the sign of sensation and sensuality. So stop justifying your behavior and instead give yourself over to the moment. This is also a good time to repair or refresh relationships with family members, as well as neighbors and former classmates. Now that dauntless Mars is in your Leo house of allies, you're more likely to take the initiative without fear of being rebuffed.

PISCES [February 19–March 19]
You might not want the attention you're about to receive, but even for an experienced Fish, well-versed in the art of inventing excuses, it might be hard to hide. That's because right now sociable Venus and generous Jupiter, the planets of good fortune, are beaming their blessings on both your mystical Neptune ruler and barrier-breaking Uranus in your sign. Significant support could follow, so before Mercury turns retrograde on Memorial Day and misplaces or delays messages and paperwork, carefully consider your options.

ARIES [March 20–April 19]
Did you rake it in or shell it out? The big money package was due to arrive just as the sun in your Taurus house of assets was rewarded by Jupiter in your reputable Capricorn midheaven. Just because the planet of good fortune recently turned retrograde is no reason to think that Lady Luck has forsaken you. Thanks to the work you've done and the connections you've made, you'll collect all year long. Plus, with your Mars ruler in luxury-loving Leo after seven months in cautious Cancer, you deserve a spending spree.

TAURUS [April 20–May 20]
The multi-talented Bull rarely sneezes at an opportunity to display your abilities, but if you sense that an offer from nebulous Neptune in your career zone has a funky odor, by all means, blow it off. Should you feel the challenge is legitimate and that it'll enhance your reputation, then go ahead and accept it. You might not get as juicy a gig for the rest of the summer because, as of Memorial Day, musical, visionary Neptune will be on hiatus until Halloween. Mercury also flips that day, but only for three weeks.

AND NOT A DROP TO DRINK

Andy Spellman, John Legend and Dan Fireman at the Copley Plaza

Don't Drink the Water...

The VIP preview party for Mass. Art's annual auction—which included works by such contemporary stars as Kara Walker, Ed Ruscha and Cecily Brown—featured the mandatory white wine and cheese, but for teetotalers, the only H_2O option was the tautologically named and indescribably vile "Aquafina Citrus Twist Sparkling Carbonated Water Beverage," which tasted, as one guest put it, "like cough medicine."

"I actually had to eat a piece of cheese to get the taste out of my mouth," said another.

Thankfully, lead sponsors Wes and Paul Karger of Twin Focus Capital Partners hosted a dinner party afterwards in the new dining room at Stella, where potable mineral water and delicious wines were served.

The moral of the story: Jesus might have turned water into wine, but Aquafina has managed to turn it into something that would have Betty Ford begging for a glass of over-oaked Chardonnay.

You Can't Judge a Man by His Shoes...

I'm a fan of any fundraiser featuring a headline act I'd happily pay good money to see, and when you combine that with a cause like One Family (the organization started by sneaker heir Dan Fireman to end family homelessness), you've got yourself one hell of an evening.

In addition to celebrating the graduation of the program's participants, the event, held at the Copley Plaza, honored homelessness crusaders Sister Margaret Leonard, Nancy Schwoyer and the Red Sox Foundation, and after dinner there was a performance by Grammy-winning crooner John Legend, whom one guest described as "sex on a piano."

Among the highly diverse crowd of 650 or so: philanthropist Paul Epstein and his wife, Saskia, banking bigwig Ron Walker, TV star Liz Walker, the Reverend Gloria White-Hammond, and one guest who looked at Legend's footwear and said, "Uh-oh. I don't think those are Reeboks."

He Was a Jolly Good Fellow...

If you've ever wondered whether there's life after death, you should have been at the State Room for the Brain Tumor Society's fundraiser to honor the late Richard B. Ross.

A bigwig in consulting, tireless philanthropist, avid sailor and all-around good guy, Ross would have turned 65 in April had he not been on one of the planes that crashed into the World Trade Center on 9/11. To honor his legacy, his family and a large circle of super-influential friends gathered for a gala featuring cocktails, dinner, a live auction and a deeply moving tribute, including a few words from his daughter, Alison, who developed and recovered from a brain tumor as a youngster.

Jessica Naddaff and Harley Bilzerian at the Brain Tumor Society gala

In addition to his other two children, Franklin and Abigail Ross Goodman, his widow, Judi, and scads of in-laws from the super-prominent Rotenberg family, there were such titans of real estate as Arthur Winn and Steve Karp with their respective mishpuchas, mega-entrepreneurs like George Naddaff and Steve Karol, fashion designer Joseph Abboud, Brookline doyenne Diane Gordon and her husband, Lloyd, and one guest who said, "I want people to say things like this at my 65th. Only I'd like to be around to hear them."

The Pain in Spain Stays Mainly in the Frame...

Think Hollywood movie stars and celebutantes live in a fishbowl? Try being a European royal.

For anyone disgusted with the American media's obsession over fame at its most mediocre, the black-tie opening of the El Greco to Velázquez exhibition at the Museum of Fine Arts was a real eye-opener.

The reception was attended by Her Royal Highness Doña Cristina de Borbón, the Infanta of Spain, and her former pro-handball-playing husband, His Excellency Don Iñaki Urdangarín, the Duke of Palma. Lying in wait for them was a contingent of European journalists who brought new meaning to the term "rude and invasive."

The evening attracted the high-profile likes of Ted Kennedy and contemporary Spanish master Antonio López García, and for security reasons, the press was asked to remain at a distance, but apparently the European journos mistook feet for millimeters and swarmed the princess like locusts on a cornfield. The pièce de résistance? Before the event, there were numerous inquiries from the foreign press demanding to know, "Which princess are you getting—the pretty one or the ugly one?"

All of which goes to show that no matter how pathetic the American media are, Jamie Lynn Spears, Ali Lohan and Nicky Hilton should count their lucky stars they don't live in Spain. ✖✖✖

Wave of Jubilation

I wish Jo Malone would bottle the smell of Nantucket, the blossomy blast that envelops you coming off the ferry. I'd take a whiff on wet winter days just as a Seattlite uses a mood lamp to escape the rain. Then again, I might miss the anticipation, the slow buildup to Boston's short beach season. A distant memory, the warm weather scatters us to the shore like sand shaken from a towel.

This issue will help you make the most of the upcoming months (or at least make you laugh). Inside, you'll get the scoop on haute Hibachi cuisine, concerts by the sea and suitable fashions. There's also a trashy read—Andrew Rimas' ridiculous romp through recycled chick-lit and techno-thriller clichés. Like the characters, Mona Dashwood and Buck Scrod, Jonathan Soroff bares his soul, and then some. Following an intense training regimen, he moonlights as a go-go boy, and YouTube has the video to prove it.

Our cover guy, John Waters, knows a thing or two about films that push the limits of good taste. The comedic genius behind movies like Hairspray and Cry-Baby, Waters spends Memorial through Labor days in Provincetown. It seems everyone has a favorite summer spot. Go enjoy yours!

Check out Pickles, Kerry and Danny on the shoot. Waters explains: "Since 1992 I have taken a Polaroid of every single person that enters my house for any reason. I do the same at my New York apartment, my San Francisco apartment, my Baltimore studio and my summer rental in Provincetown. I label each photo with the date, name and reason for visit. Eventually, all the photos will be sent to my cinema archives at Wesleyan University, and they cannot be published until I'm dead and everyone in all of the photos is dead."

WEATHERMEN

Pity the New England surfer. Instead of sun, spliffs and open-minded girls in bikinis, our local boarders have to study weather charts. "You have to be an amateur meteorologist to know when conditions are good," says Mark Driscoll, co-owner, along with Jamie Hosker, of the North Shore's Brickhouse surf shops. "In California, you have swells that form 1,000 miles away, so it's easy to follow. Here, the weather develops on top of you. It's like a soap opera."

Unpredictable waves are one problem. Glacial temperatures are another. Water that would freeze a penguin's privates meant that, until the past 10 years or so, New England surfers could only ply their craft during the summer and early fall. "Back in the day, guys wore dive suits, bulky things not designed for surfing," says Driscoll, who learned to surf as a child at Short Beach in Nahant. "The big changes came with the advent of better wet-suit technology."

Prime season nowadays is September through March, although Driscoll says that the summertime attracts more beginners. Fringe players who like to dress the part. The ocean being a fickle mistress, local boarders need to keep flexible schedules, and despite owning a successful business, Driscoll and Hosker still manage to surf two or three days a week. "It's a laid-back scene," says Driscoll. "If you're out in the winter in 36-degree water with some other loon, you're gonna say 'hi.'"

Drink of the Moment

Sweet Avenue

In the back lobby of the InterContinental stands RumBa, a breezy and colorful CiTy CaBana.

It's an assertive, bow-tied bunch behind the bar, quick to detail the quality of their ample rum selection or jab a sampling straw into your drink. Their confidence is bolstered by a cocktail menu designed by prestigious mixer Francesco Lafranconi and the influx of tasty seasonal additions. (Look for the Rose-y iced tea this summer.)

"We make more mojitos than anyone in the city," boasts barman Jay Lombardo. The developed muddling muscles may explain RumBa's repute for really macerating their fruits. But for some of their signature cocktails, like the Avenida ($14), the clobbering may be part of the technique. "It depends on the drink," says Lombardo, wielding a spiked muddler the size of a small bowling pin. "For that one, we really get in there."

For the Avenida, he gives raspberries and pineapple a liberal thrashing before shaking in simple syrup, St. Clément Rhum and Mathilde Creme de Pêche. With a topping of the fruit, it's very beachy. Just make sure to grab the garnishes before you do too much sipping. They'll soon be 86'ed below the ice, but some DIY muddling will draw them up.

The cocktail has a swooping profile, beginning with light, sugary tones, then suddenly zooming up to a piquant finish. It's a bit of a sneak attack. "It's all in the muddling," Lombardo explains. "The more you muddle, the finer it is with all the juice from the raspberries and pineapples. You get the sweet and the tart."

Something sweet with some heat, like a buffalo chicken crostini ($12), fills the taste bud negative space, with candied celery providing a bridge over a feared flavor clash. All in all, the Avenida is an escape from the well-worn groove eroded by other tropical drinks. "It's a nice alternative," says Lombardo. "There's only so many mojitos you can make."

Question for Kelly Malone

What are your favorite songs to play in the summer?

Kelly Malone is a cohost on MIX 98.5's "Lander in the Morning" (weekdays, 6–9 am) and moonlights as the PA announcer at Bruins home games.

YOUNG MC "BUST A MOVE"
There are so many classic lines! "You ate so much you nearly split your pants… They're lying on the beach perpetratin' a tan so that the brother with the money can be their man… Your best friend Harry, has a brother Larry, in five days from now he's gonna marry…."

DJ JAZZY JEFF & THE FRESH PRINCE "SUMMERTIME"
I love it when Lander throws this song on in the summer months. It really is the ultimate summer song!

WRECKX-N-EFFECT "RUMP SHAKER"
I'm laughing at myself for even including this song! But what can I say? All I wanna do is zoom-zoom-zoom-zoom and a boom-boom.

Good Eats

Hot Diggity

Just about the only respect a hot dog bun gets in this town revolves around lobster meat. But frankly, a split-top roll can do no better than Ezra "Speed" Anderson and his blue-canopied cart parked smack in the middle of Boston's meatpacking district. The octogenarian, or often his manager, Greg Gale, toasts his sub-sized rolls over the same charcoal fire that sears the apple juice–marinated, barbecue-glazed Pearl dogs—which are cooked to order (speed ironically disregarded). Even the fixin's are homemade. Be wary, though—old-school quality means old-school practices like quirky hours and long lines. Bring patience and cash; a meal on wheels doesn't involve credit cards.

Going Out

PIERLESS

Once a modest, slightly kooky oasis on Long Wharf, the Landing has held its own over the past eight years, keeping pace with the area's kookier developments. A single push-cart has given way to a steamy wagon circle of sausages and fried dough. Visitors stepping off the boat Codzilla grab a bite at a shack called the Dog 'n' Claw. It's all a little silly, which has allowed the Landing to keep its persona despite the increasing hullabaloo.

Inside the chained borders, the watering hole boasts 350 seats, but its heart beats at the far end under a cobalt tarp. Around the 24-stool bar, strangers mingle with a boozy geniality that only grows with sunshine. On a recent day, businessmen who ducked out early shared a laugh. An older Irish couple tried their first Harpoon while a local explained baseball.

The fact that the Landing is completely outdoors is one major draw, but there are others. "You can smoke at the bar," acknowledges manager Rhonda Mariano. "That's a plus for a lot of people." Then there are the infamous 64-oz fish bowl ($25) and 32-oz guppy bowl ($15), never to be served to just one person, because sipping an Ocean Potion from a plastic jug with a giant straw looks ridiculous unless you're sharing it like a malt-shop sundae. "That's the bait," Mariano says. "Once one person sees one, that's it. Then we just make 'em, make 'em, make 'em."

And therein lies the Landing's spirit. It's a tourist bar that's received the local's seal of approval. When the weather is absolutely perfect, Bostonians can be great city ambassadors: Sir, normally I'd choke you by your fanny pack, but today I would be delighted to give you directions to Cheers. Sometimes we just want our beer served in a bucket. And so the Landing fills up because it feels good to tan away the winter pale, tilt one back and act a little out of character. "As soon as they get out of work, they come pouring down the street," says a wide-eyed Mariano. "You're like, 'Oh no, get ready.'"

STRIFE CYCLE

DEAR BIKE DOUCHE:
Remember me? I'm the girl who you literally veered in front of on Cambridge Street in Kendall Square on May 7 because you didn't feel you had to slow down for the garbage truck in your precious bike lane. I watched you, prior to this, cutting off other cars and running red lights before catching up to me. Instead of slowing safely and looking to make sure there were no cars behind you, or using a hand signal, you decided to fly out in front of my car, making me slam on my brakes to avoid hitting you (maybe I shouldn't have), then veering into the oncoming lane of traffic and nearly hitting another driver head-on. Apparently, me being a big, bad driver does not entitle me to honk my horn at you. Seemingly, this offense was so heinous that you felt it appropriate to pull up alongside my car at the next light and spit all over my window. You are a disgusting, filthy pig, not to mention a coward who probably has balls the size of jelly beans. (I mean, you do ride a bike every day, right?) The next time you do this to someone, I hope they have some pepper spray to hose you down with, or perhaps a nice door in your side will cure you from riding your bike like an ahole.

Sincerely,
A Safe Driver

To (Yet Another) Hottie on the Red Line, May 7, Around 7:30 pm:

You and your gal pal jumped on at Central (I think) and exited, as did I, at Park Street—I to the street, you two to the outbound Green Line. I was tempted to follow, but that would've been creepy (as opposed to this?). Like Dolly Parton, I was thoroughly awestruck by your amazing... blonde wig—which you apparently had just purchased and couldn't resist the opportunity to flash about on the train. Some guy took the bait and stood up to ask you about it, but I couldn't hear what you said to him. I, obviously, prefer a more indirect approach. Drop me a line if you'd like to get together and play dress-up sometime....

ASK THE EXPERT

Q: WHAT ARE THE SECRETS TO BUILDING A KICK-ASS CASTLE?

SEAN FITZPATRICK
MASTER SAND SCULPTOR AND OWNER OF FITZY SNOWMAN SCULPTING
FITZYSNOWMAN.COM

1. A good set of tools is critical. Bring a full-sized spade shovel. You'll also need three five-gallon plastic buckets—two of them will be for carrying water, and you'll cut off the bottom on the other one so it's just a bottomless bucket. You'll also need some carving tools, and a good straw attached to a lanyard that you can string around your neck. This will keep the sand off it and allow you to blow away tiny grains of sand to expose details of your carving.

2. If you're brave, build as close to the high-tide line as possible. This will limit your need to travel long distances to retrieve water. Start digging in a circular pattern, piling the wet sand in the middle. If the sand still looks dry then fill those five-gallon buckets and dump them on your pile. Repeat this process until you are sure all the sand is wet. Once you have a good-sized pile—at least twice the diameter of your bottomless bucket—you're ready to compact your pile. This process resembles wine making, so it's time to bare those piggy toes and get dirty. Finish packing your pile by hand. Make sure the top of your pile is level and place your bottomless bucket (top side down) on top of the pile.

3. Start filling your bottomless bucket by adding about three inches of sand at a time. Add plenty of water to saturate the sand. Mix it by hand to allow all the air to escape. The excess water will drain out, so don't worry if you think you're adding too much water. Repeat this process until the bucket is full. Once all the excess water has drained away you're ready to remove it. Because there's no bottom on your bucket, there will be no vacuum and it should slide off easily. If you encounter resistance, wait a few minutes or simply tap the sides of the bucket gently and it should come right off.

4. Now your bucket is off. Start by shaving small amounts of sand off at a time. To create a peak of a castle, start by making a roof line; then rotate 90 degrees and repeat to achieve the top of a tower. Don't make your first attempt dangerously thin. Removing too much sand at once can cause a collapse. Practice making windows and doors [and] even stairs. There are endless possibilities.

STELLA ARTOIS

Perfection HAS ITS PLACE

A perfectly poured Stella Artois is the Gold Standard of Belgian beer.

Step One THE PURIFICATION

The bartender selects the signature glass for the beer being poured. The glass is scrubbed in a cool-water bath, preferably with a mild detergent. It's then rinsed with cold water to chill the glass.

Step Two THE SACRIFICE

The tap is opened in one swift motion to let the first burst of foam flow away. It must never enter the glass, thus ensuring every drop of beer is fresh.

Step Three THE LIQUID ALCHEMY

The glass is held at a 45-degree angle to create the perfect balance of liquid to foam.

Step Four THE HEAD

The head is created by straightening and lowering the glass. The foam is visually appealing and releases the beer's aroma.

Step Five THE REMOVAL

The bartender closes the tap in one quick action and moves the glass away from the faucet to ensure no drops spoil the perfect head.

Step Six THE BEHEADING

While the beer is flowing over the edge of the glass, the bartender cuts the head gently with a head cutter at a 45-degree angle. This eliminates the larger bubbles that burst easily and accelerate the dissipation of the head.

Step Seven THE JUDGMENT

The bartender now stands in judgment. The beer's head should be two fingers thick.

Step Eight THE CLEANSING

The bartender then rinses the bottom and sides of the glass. This keeps the glass clean and cool and makes it comfortable to hold.

Step Nine THE BESTOWAL

A perfectly poured pint of Belgian beer is presented with the logos of the coaster and glass facing the customer.

Style

BURN RUBBER No doubt swimsuits are the toughest thing to find for summer, but when it comes to footwear we have an easy solution: jelly shoes. While the simple mention may bring back visions of '80s trends gone wrong, today's hot designers have given the style a modern makeover. HUNGRY AND MAD

On epicurean and emotional travails

Literary Figs, Fresh off the Vine

BOSTON RESTAURATEUR Franco Romagnoli and his wife, Gwen, take us on a highly flavorful tour of Italy, using fork and pen to craft a delicious travelogue. The couple lovingly explores and appreciates the Italian soul, delving lusciously into art, history, nature, peasant spirit, ancient traditions and, of course, grapes, vegetables and prosciutto. Kinship and superstition characterize some still-extant practices. Tuna fishermen off Sicily exhort the Almighty: "Holy Savior, You who created the sun and the moon, the tuna and who fishes it. You made promises, and don't forget it now." The 19th-century poet Giusti praises his curly-horned helpmeet beast: "I love you humble ox; you imbue my heart with a feeling of vigor and peace." Photographs of golden landscapes and eternal-seeming villages pour through the book like the "green-gold" olive oil of the many rich dishes upon which the Romagnolis feast. Giving romantic, bright-eyed attention to their Italyscape, their scrumptiously shared lore and style are good enough to eat.

Female Anger Management

THERAPIST MARCIA WEISS takes the view that feminine anger, rather than simply being managed, needs to be understood and then handled in a new way. In her upcoming class, women explore the fear, hurt and squashed self-esteem that often underlie this emotion, connecting it to triggers. Framed differently, it becomes possible to redirect the skewed energy and express it more productively. Obviously rage, on and off the road, and physical or verbal abuse aren't acceptable. But by considering other viewpoints—maybe a whiny, resistant child requires understanding, not berating—a participant can stand back and get better perspective, both on herself and on those kindling her irritation. The notion that angry women are bad, Weiss believes, can invalidate legitimate feeling. With shame quieted down, her class becomes a social laboratory for better grasping and applying—but not entirely eliminating—what may be the righteous ember of strong emotion.

Marcia Weiss teaches Anger Management for Women at the Cambridge Center for Adult Education (617-547-6789, collaborativepsychotherapy.com) starting June 16.

and takes over Stoddard's space.

Once it's firmly rooted, ivy grows enthusiastically to cover new territory. Just like its namesake, Downtown Crossing's Ivy Restaurant—or its owner, anyway—is expanding to open a new eatery in the historic Stoddard's building, just across the street.

Formerly a knife shop, the space will house a "classic American pub—but I hate to use the word 'pub.' It'll be a restaurant," says William Ashmore, director of operations for Ivy and the forthcoming Stoddard's. Besides a shoeshine station and a phone booth—doing double duty as a wheelchair lift—the 120-seat dining room will feature a 30-foot oak and mahogany bar.

Slated to open in early September, the menu will focus on "classic Americana with some European influences" created by a "well-known, big-name chef," whom Ashmore won't yet reveal.

It's generally known that the Miracle of Science folks plan to open a new spot in the former Greenhouse Coffee Shop in Harvard Square—in fact, the lease was signed nearly a year ago—but the owners remain tight-lipped about details. Even their PR folks are cautious. "It's unlike anything they have on their plate," says a rep at MC Communications. Not even their closest neighbors in Cambridge have a clue. "It's in progress; we hear the sounds of banging and remodeling going on," offers a nearby source.

More from the Rumor Department: According to an employee who first claims, "I honestly don't know a thing about it," the owners of Bukowski's Tavern are in the process of opening two new restaurants: one next to the Bukowski's in Cambridge and another in the South End. "They're kind of secretive about things," he says. So you didn't hear it here....

TURNING JAPANESE

Shiki brings another stellar spot to Brookline.

Japanese cuisine has many ways of winning and maintaining a strong following. For some, the visual artistry delights the eyes before the other senses are brought to bear. For others, particular dishes strike a responsive chord. Tonkatsu, panko-breaded, deep-fried pork cutlets, captivated my younger son on a family trip to Japan, probably because of its resemblance to his first food love, veal cutlet Milanese. Sushi attracted my elder son, sophisticate and world traveler, and noodles, my wife, satisfying a pasta urge she developed over 10 years of young adulthood in Italy. The classic simplicity of individual preparations combined with the marvelous variety has made me a fervent fan.

Shiki, tucked away in a cozy, below-grade venue on Babcock Street in Brookline, provides engaging environs in which to broaden one's knowledge and appreciation of Japanese food. You can't help but admire the care and professionalism that husband-and-wife owners Yashio and Misako Uda bring to the enterprise—from working wonders in the kitchen to the warm hospitality that infuses the service. The restaurant's wide-ranging menu seemed daunting at first, until I liberated myself from the need to plan and structure a meal like a military campaign. Instead, like a child let loose in an amusement park, I wandered from page to page, selecting preparations from ingredients that caught my eye and struck my fancy.

Broiled sea-eel millefeuille ($7) combined the robust, pleasantly sweet flavor of eel, grilled nagaimo (a species of yam of distinctive mucilaginous texture), other vegetables and a poached egg into a rich, multilayered treat. Equally tasty, "foil yaki" ($5.75) gathered into a beggar's purse an aromatic bundle of salmon, shrimp, Japanese eggplant, Napa cabbage and kabocha (squash). Shrimp reappeared in a number of additional presentations, each seemingly more delicious than the last. Ebi mayo ($5.75) brought five medium-sizers marinated in honey and accented with a rich, mellow mayonnaise sauce. Ebi fry ($6) brought three larger shrimp battered in panko and deep fried, served with a special sauce. These contrasted with shrimp tempura ($6), as light and delicate as the ebi fry was gold and brassy.

Vegetable tempura ($5) replicated the ethereal texture of the shrimp tempura, with carefully controlled flash frying sealing the pristine freshness of the zucchini, string beans, broccoli, asparagus and mushrooms. Softshell crab ($10) also profited from the miracle of tempura, making it the standout on one visit. The heavier panko-crumb breading enveloped succulent karobuta pork loin in the tonkatsu ($8), but the American disinclination to serve pork anywhere close to rare deprived it of optimum texture. Other deep-fried dishes, fish karaage ($6.50) and chicken karaage ($6), were also tasty, if more ordinary.

Rice is the staff of life in Japan, and one of Shiki's preparations in particular stood out—salmon ochazuke ($5.50). The dish involves a little tableside shtick: A bowl containing a mound of simple white rice, salmon and a minty leaf were set before me, into which the waitress poured a mild but evocatively flavored broth from a teapot to create what the menu described as "popular Japanese comfort food at its most basic." Another distinctive, non-fried offering, beef maki ($9.50), consisted of thinly sliced, tender seared beef, garnished with scallion, asparagus, mushrooms and shredded seaweed; it was a light and refreshing change of pace.

Finally, yaki ika ($5.75), grilled squid with ginger sauce, merits a paragraph of its own. The squid body was as tender as I've ever experienced, with the tentacles only slightly more resilient, while the ginger sauce complemented the subtle flavor. As a footnote to our second meal, we ventured briefly to the sushi offerings and enjoyed the salmon ($5.25) and unagi ($6.50) rolls.

Shiki is a tiny restaurant and only takes reservations for parties of six or more. However, the food is so good and the value so high (I was amazed that our two-hour feast on a recent Sunday evening produced such a modest bill) that it's worth a wait to score a seat (come early). First-rate performance by the kitchen, gracious, efficient and attentive service, and substantial value combine to make this a terrific eatery and a destination spot in a town replete with competition. ✖✖✖

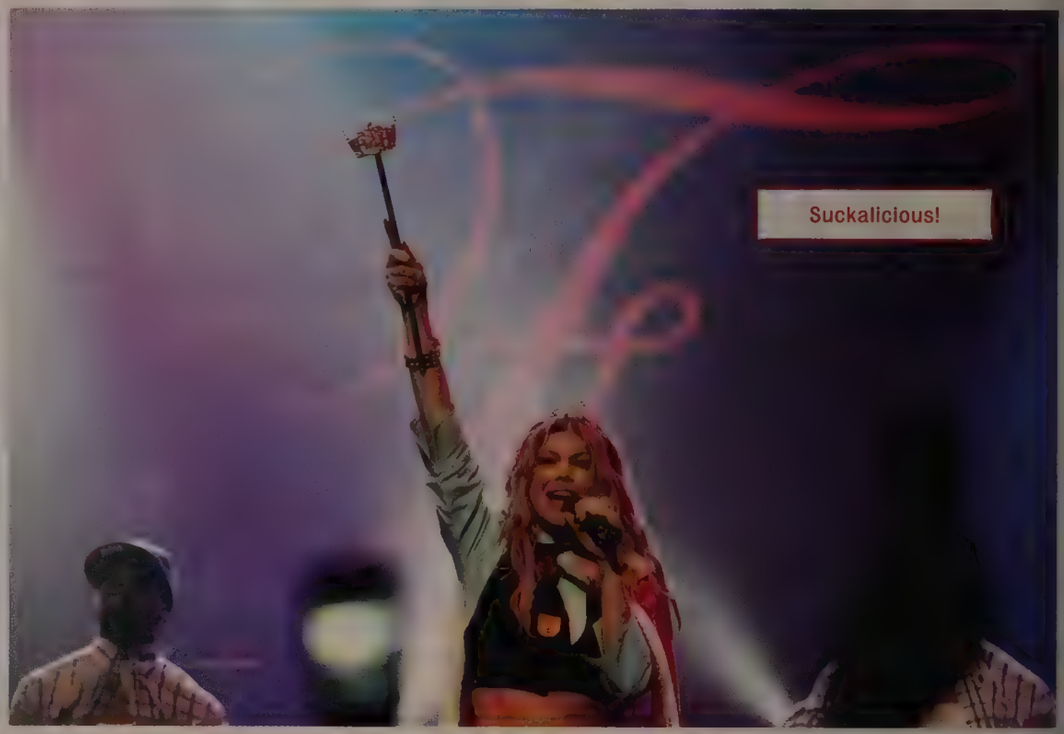
COLD IN HERRE

Where are the hot songs of 2008?



EVERYONE KNOWS the music industry is in the crapper. Album sales are down, piracy remains rampant, and it's been years since the J. Geils Band had a hit. It's gotten so bad that soon rappers will be bragging when they make too much money to continue contributing to their Roths.

A recent issue of Harper's noted that the best-selling album of 2007 would've ranked 14th on the list of hits from 2000. There are lots of theories about why this would be the case, most of them centering on the idea that the Internet is killing the music business. But I think I know the real reason, one that nobody ever seems to mention: New music sucks.

At first I thought my general disdain for and apathy toward new music was rooted in my own calcifying tastes. I presumed I'd reached a point in life where I simply prefer songs that are already part of my personal history. If this didn't happen to people, there'd be no need for Neil Diamond.

For example, the last time that my dad got interested in a new album was around 1995, when Natalie Merchant went solo, and I'm pretty sure that had a lot to do with the fact that he thought Natalie Merchant was hot. If she had a face like a wrecked trash truck, I sorta doubt my dad would've plunked down $15.99 for Tiger Lily.

> There's an amazing lack of creativity among contemporary artists.

Out of curiosity, I looked up the best-selling album of 2007 and discovered that it was Josh Groban's Noël, a compilation of Christmas songs that sold 3.7 million copies. That's when it dawned on me that maybe I'm not the problem. If Josh Groban singing "Little Drummer Boy" is the hottest track of the year, maybe music is the problem.

By comparison, here are some of the artists and albums from 2000 that sold more copies than Groban's Christmas tunes. Eminem had The Marshall Mathers LP and Britney Spears was mainstreaming jailbait with Oops!... I Did It Again. We had Limp Bizkit, Dr. Dre, Destiny's Child and Nelly. Also moving millions were Sisqó, Kid Rock and even the Baha Men. I believe that Sisqó, for one, described a deep-seated human condition that resonates throughout time and within all cultures when he sang, "She had dumps like a truck truck truck, thighs like what what what... that thong th-thong thong thong." And yes, "deep-seated" was a thong pun.

Is there anyone from 2008 who's bound to become the next Britney Spears–level superstar? Any legend making a comeback along the lines of Dre's 2001? Anyone who can match Kid Rock's level of personal hygiene? I don't see it.

For one thing, there's an amazing lack of creativity among contemporary artists. Consider these four songs from last year's Billboard Hot 100: "Shawty," "Buy U a Drank (Shawty Snappin')," "Get It Shawty" and "Shortie Like Mine." (I apologize if there are errors in the remainder of this column, as the previous sentence broke my spell-checker despite its relatively shawt length.)

Also making the Hot 100 were Fergie's "Glamorous" and "Fergalicious," which I'm pretty sure are the same song. Coming in at No. 100 was R. Kelly and Usher's "Same Girl," which I mention only as an excuse to tell you that a coworker of a friend of mine is on the R. Kelly jury in Chicago. She's trying her best to get out of it. When the judge asked her to finish the sentence "Mr. Kelly is..." she replied, "He's guilty." I would've responded in the style of R. Kelly's Trapped in the Closet rap opera and said, "He's guilty, yelled the juror, but just then a midget ran out from under the judge's robe, and the midget had a gun, and he pointed the gun at R. Kelly and yelled, 'I know you had sex with my wife because I found your underwear in my closet... closet... closet....'"

Besides the musical herd mentality, hereafter referred to as Shawty Syndrome, I have a few other theories behind the suckiness of current music. For one thing, the digital-synthesizer-voice gimmick needs to stop. Back in the day, this trick only popped up occasionally, such as on Cher's "Believe" and, say, every Daft Punk song. But now it seems like all the tunes on JAM'N 94.5 feature some variation of the supremely annoying computerized gargle. Akon is the worst offender (most notably on "I Wanna 'Love' You"), and now even Snoop's doing it (on "Sexual Seduction"). Snoop, I thought you were better than that.

Or perhaps the decline of the industry stems from the fact that nobody can just be a musician anymore. You have to have a clothing line and a fragrance and a reality show. Jay-Z owns a brand of vodka, Armadale. A while back, Jay-Z told Ellen Degeneres that he could write a new hit song in 15 minutes, because it comes that easy to him. Well, man, get off your yacht and write another "Show Me What You Got," and I promise I'll buy some Armadale. And maybe even your album, too. ✖✖✖

SEAS THE DAY

The beaches keeps Bostonians from jumping ship.

WHY DO WE STAY in Massachusetts? In so many ways, it's pitiful—housing costs, tribal wars, questionable governors. But then there's the sports, the politics and the spirit of revenge. And another big draw: Many of us couldn't bear to be away from our beaches. If you grew up here, there's some primal urge to be by the ocean. My grandfather owned a house in Nantasket, a block from the beach, which I consider one of the greatest in the world. Everyone at Grampa's place—my mother, my father, three uncles and my grandfather—had to participate in various sports contests. The only exempt person was my grandmother, who wore a lot of black dresses and sensible shoes, and who seemed to disapprove of everything that hinted at danger or potential disability.

As a teenager I was a camp counselor in Maine, eager to hustle cash tips from the parents of the little darlings during family visits. My fellow counselors and I headed for Ogunquit Beach or Old Orchard on days off, mostly because there were scads of girls there from Montreal who we heard were fast. This was largely wishful thinking on our part. But the bars would serve beer to anyone who could belly up (everyone had fake IDs). And we would rub ourselves all over with baby oil and iodine, baking in the sun, body surfing, flexing imaginary muscles and dreaming of beach conquests, which we told friends in the fall had actually happened.

In later summers, I worked as a busboy on Main Street in Hyannis. Cape Cod was a college kid's paradise. I made a small salary plus 15 percent of the waitresses' tips doing dinner service. The days I spent on Craigville Beach or visiting friends who had one of those deeded shacks on Nauset. They felt funky and more special in their way than any modern, self-conscious tear-down creation in the Hamptons.

My first real job was in the investment business. I was assigned to open a seasonal office on the North Shore in Swampscott in a dying, old ark on the water, the New Ocean House, a summer home for rich widows. The small two-person shop was in the lobby, an inviting spot for guests to drop in, watch the markets roll by on ticker tape and reward the nice young man with some commissions. When the day's trading closed, I would go across the street to the pool and the beach to schmooze with prospective clients.

I've always told my children that life isn't delivered over the transom. You have to be out there for good things, life-changing things, to occur. Guests at the hotel asked if I'd give an investment seminar some evening. I figured, with a degree in English literature, I could probably lecture for five minutes on any subject and fake the rest. One lonely older couple praised the talk, saying that their daughter and I had to meet. "It's fate," the woman told me, smiling as if she never believed in fate.

Their daughter was Lesley Stahl of 60 Minutes fame, long before she began to grill the rich and notorious. One day after we met, she picked me up for lunch. She had a Corvette convertible. The top was down, and we drove along the coast to a restaurant on the beach specializing in fried clams. We should have felt like Cary Grant and Grace Kelly in To Catch a Thief. But it didn't really take beyond a friendship and, I think, rooting for each other. My father, a cynic from the old school, said, "A romance could never work until you can afford to buy your own Corvette."

So I continued to stroll the beach, having picnics with dates that always included chilled white wine (Frascati from Rome for $2 a bottle), French baguettes, cheese and tomatoes. I also used to wear a tiny, woolen, red-striped bathing suit that my wife eventually called my "striped trellalube." After marrying, we rented a beach house for a month in a fairly old-fashioned community. I wore the striped trellalube to the shore. A snob I knew at college came over to me. "Just a hint," he said. "We wear proper bathing costume here." Well, excuse me.

Now I have a cartoon taped to the window next to my office desk. It shows a middle-aged man coming out of the bathroom with a towel around his waist. His wife is in bed, reading. She looks up. The caption has the man saying, "Caution. Some viewer discretion is advised." But I still need beaches not too far away. ✖✖✖

SIDESHOW BOB, NO-HITTERS, BIG AL VS. KG AND THE END OF SPYGATE

4 Thoughts on the Eastern Conference Finals

Up in Smoke... The Garden did away with the pregame smoke show for the ECF, and we must say it's been a smashing success. The court's clear at tip-off, the crowd is no less pumped, and we don't have to worry about a stray flare landing on Lucky's top hat and incinerating him in front of 2,000 impressionable children.

The Mask 3... How many fake nose protection masks do you think Rip Hamilton brings with him to away games? Like what if Perk "accidentally" ripped (no pun intended) Hamilton's mask off during a game and then "accidentally" stomped it to smithereens? Would he have another one ready? Would he have to borrow Antonio McDyess'?

My, That's a Nice Head Stain You Have... After Game 1, KG called Rasheed Wallace the most underrated player in the league, and we couldn't agree more. As members of Tarheel Nation, we find it interesting that while Jerry Stackhouse and Vince Carter were a little more hyped coming out of school, Wallace and Antawn Jamison will retire having had more commendable careers than their respective teammates.

What Can Brown Do for You?... Where would the Celtics be without PJ Brown? Not only has he been irreplaceable off the bench—including connecting on what might have been the biggest shot of Game 7 against Cleveland—but rumor has it the whole team's been getting $5 off at the movies since Tony Allen stole and made laminated copies of PJ's AARP card.

3 DATES TO WATCH

5/28 The Sox finish up a six-day, six-game West Coast run against the A's and the Mariners. After the game, Bud Selig will send the team on an impromptu trip to Hong Kong, where they'll play one inning of exhibition baseball before flying back to the States for a four-game series against the Angels. You know, just for fun.

6/5 It's the start of the NBA Finals, which means that we'll either all be packing into the Garden for Game 1 against the Spurs or Lakers, or hanging lifelessly from the rafters in the space where banner No. 17 should have been.

6/6 The Patriots kick off minicamp in Foxborough. In other news, Lil' Wayne's got a concert in Providence on May 30. Maybe the team should have Kevin Faulk report early.

5 BITS ON THE BOSOX

[Steps on rake; shudders]... JD Drew is the Sideshow Bob of Major League Baseball. At the beginning of every season, he comes out strong, positive and upbeat; you convince yourself that he's finally turned his life around. But alas, the evil eventually reappears and you vow never to trust him again. Going five weeks without a home run is more despicable than fake-marrying Aunt Selma.

We Don't Care About the Young Folks... Back in the early '90s, the Sox had a rookie pitcher named Joe Hudson, whom the announcers obsessively referred to as Young Joe Hudson. Don Orsillo must have been listening, because he seems to think Young Clay—a decent moniker for an MC, but not so much for an underachieving rookie pitcher—is Buchholz's full first name. We dare you to go a whole game without saying it, Announcer Boy.

Newsworthy No-No?... When Young Clay Buchholz threw his no-hitter last season, it seemed like it was all we had to talk about for a week. But with Jon Lester's recent no-no—as amazing a story as it was—not even a day went by before Spygate and the Celtics had reclaimed our attention. Just another testament to the absurdity that is the current local sports scene.

Monster Madness... Maybe it's time to take down the Green Monster sign that keeps track of Manny's climb to 500 home runs. Not only has his power dipped to the depths of Craig Grebeck since its inception, but what happens if he breaks it on the road? Do we have to go through an awkward Manny ceremony when he gets back? And then do we keep it up all year? Will anyone care about 500 in September? Let's just take it down now. He won't even notice.

The Red Sox bullpen is starting to look a lot like the Celtics bench: one rock and a bunch of scattered parts.

Down on Depth... The Red Sox bullpen is starting to look a lot like the Celtics bench. You've got your one rock—with Jonathan Papelbon assuming the role of James Posey—and then a bunch of scattered, unreliable parts that Terry Francona and Doc Rivers interchange on a whim.

2 POINTS ON SPYGATE BEFORE WE NEVER TALK ABOUT IT AGAIN

Not Saying He's as Bad as Barry... After hearing the ovation for Bill Belichick at Game 1 against the Pistons, we're starting to get a better grasp on why everyone in San Francisco was so insanely loyal to Barry Bonds. We know Belichick did something very wrong, and we should probably be a little upset, but realizing how much he's hated outside of Boston actually makes us love him more.

Give It Up... You'd think the biggest Spygate instigators—Gregg Easterbrook and Arlen Specter—would've learned a thing or two from the Roger Clemens saga. When you're wrong, just admit it; twisting the truth and spinning your story only makes it worse. Nah, they didn't learn. Their reactions to Walsh's testimony only made them look more ridiculous—and in Easterbrook's case, a little more like Eddie Munster.

ONE NECESSARY CRITICISM

We don't like speaking poorly about Tom Brady, but we've got to mention his off-putting Jumbotron etiquette at Game 7 against the Cavs. Twice, the crowd erupted at the sight of Tommy in his courtside seat, and he couldn't even muster a wave. We've seen just about every major Boston personality up on that big screen this season, and that was the first all-out snub.

TAKE 5 BONUS TRACK

An interesting question came up while we were grabbing a drink at DJ's before Game 1 of the ECF: What would the Celtics' record have been this season if the roster were entirely intact, but you substituted Al Jefferson for Kevin Garnett? Guesses ranged from 38 wins to 55 wins, and there were legit points made on all sides. While the regular-season record is debatable, we can say this with full confidence: The Celtics wouldn't have beaten the Hawks or the Cavs without KG, and that's all that matters right now. But what if KG never delivers that 17th title to Boston? He'll be 36 when his contract is up in 2012. Meanwhile, Jefferson will only be 27 years old and just hitting his prime. How will history look back on this deal if all KG brings to the table is five years' worth of ultra-competitive basketball?

Soroff On JOHN WATERS

The Pope of Trash on gross-outs, Provincetown and Hairspray's transformation

Whether you consider him a subversive freak or a comedic genius, John Waters has made waves with his transgressive cult films since the 1960s. A native of Baltimore and a summer resident of Provincetown, he began creating movies with his star, the overweight cross-dresser Divine, and their first hit was Pink Flamingos. Female Trouble, Desperate Living, Mondo Trasho and Polyester followed, but with crossovers like Hairspray and Cry-Baby, Waters began to gain more widespread popularity. Known for his pencil-thin mustache and clever deployment of professional actors like Johnny Depp alongside infamous figures like porn star Traci Lords, he always pushes the boundaries of good taste. A musical version of Cry-Baby recently opened on Broadway.

Jonathan Soroff: You're the King of Bad Taste…

John Waters: I don't brag, but others have called me that—and worse. If that's what you're passing out today, I'll wear the crown proudly.

Is there any aspect of your life in which you display refined, discerning, sophisticated taste?
Yes. In all my homes, I think. I have old antique oriental rugs. You'd probably be surprised. I collect contemporary art, and I have a huge collection of books. But then I have great touches of bad taste along with the good taste, which I think is important.

What would I be surprised to find in your home?
I don't know. I think some people think I live with lots of '50s furniture in a sort of purposely Las Vegas, kitschy style, but I don't. I always said you have to have good taste to have bad taste.

Provincetown is such a freak show. How do you stand out there?
When I'm in Provincetown, I go to the two straight bars: Downstairs at the [Governor] Bradford and the Old Colony [Tap. Straight people] are the minorities there, and I like to see the way they huddle together. I'm more interested in people who think they're normal, but they're not. I like any kind of minority who doesn't really fit into his minority group.

Grossest thing you ever filmed?
In Mondo Trasho, where there was someone dressed as an executioner chopping off chickens' heads. I don't think I'd do that again. That was hideous, although we did eat the chickens.

You could never get away with that these days. The PETA people would be all over you.
True. The most ridiculous example of that was in Serial Mom. She kills a fly in the beginning, and we couldn't actually kill a fly, so we had to put the flies to sleep, freeze them and shoot them backwards when they woke up and took off. It was really complicated and took a long time, but in the end of the movie it says, "No flies were killed in the making of this movie."

What grosses you out?
Half the movies I see. Especially romantic comedies.

So is anything taboo?
Certainly. I don't have kiddie porn in my movies. I'm against that. I'm not a believer in NAMBLA.… I think child abuse is certainly wrong.

I'd describe your look as used-car salesman–meets–child pornographer.
I'd call it "Disaster at the Dry Cleaner."

That would make a great name for a band. Let's get to Divine. Was he your muse?
At that point in my career, certainly. I made vehicles for him. He was my star. I miss him. I think about him every day. I'm still shocked he's dead, but I've probably made more movies without him than I did with him. What's funny is that since he's been dead, the critics get nicer and nicer about him every year.

How do you feel about the sanitization of Hairspray?
It was already sanitized. It was a PG movie, the one I made. But it's been reinvented every time. If the play wasn't made into a musical, it would've failed, and if it hadn't been remade into the next movie, it wouldn't have worked. All three did work, and I'm thrilled. It can't hurt the original.

And presumably it's made you a lot of money…
The play? Yes. The last movie didn't. Each time it's removed, you get less. The play I did very well with, and I'm not complaining about anything.

If you weren't a filmmaker, what would you be doing?
I'd be a lawyer for criminals who did do it, weren't sorry and would do it again if they got out. And I'd be good at it.

Is there anything you'd never poke fun at?
Well, I'm not Jewish, so I'm not going to do a lot of Jew jokes. Know what I mean? If I had AIDS, I could do AIDS jokes. But I think the rule with humor is that you have to know very well what you're talking about or be it before you make fun of it. Although Sarah Silverman disproves everything I just said, and she's really funny.

What three things will I always find in your fridge?
Evian water, some kind of jelly and zero-fat yogurt.

And in the freezer?
Bacon, because I eat irresponsibly every Sunday… and ice. I don't keep a lot in the freezer. I mostly eat fresh foods.

So what did your mother say about your work before you became rich and famous?
You know, she'd say, "You're gonna die in a mental institution, or go crazy," but overall, she's been very supportive, even with A Dirty Shame. She said, "What's it about?" and I said, "Sex addicts." And she said, "Maybe I'll die before it comes out."

Hottest man you ever filmed?
I wouldn't put it that way, but Johnny Depp is one of the finest actors and a wonderful gentleman.

Favorite thing anyone has called you?
William Burroughs called me the Pope of Trash. I don't think you can get any better than that.

Last question. Can I be in your next movie?
Probably not, because you don't live in Baltimore and probably don't belong to the union, so if I flew you in I'd have to pay first-class airfare, hotel and a per diem. It's a budgetary issue.

Well, f you. I still want to be in it.
Well, are you a child? No matter how good an actor, you'd still have to play an 8-year-old.

OK, but keep me in mind for the next one.
Haven't thought it up yet, but I will. ×××

THE IMPROPER'S CONDENSED SUMMER READ

EVERY FICTION CLICHÉ THAT'S UNFIT TO PRINT IN THIS, OUR OWN TRASHY NOVELLA

By Andrew Rimas

Noon: Nantucket at the Frilly Pillow Suite at the Clamjammer Resort

Everything's so quaint and organic and Yankee that I want to stick the whole island in my vanity case (a steal at $479 from Nordstrom. The vanity case. Not the island.). Actually, I bet I could squeeze the entire hotel into the 18-piece Louis Vuitton luggage set that fills my room like a gorgeous, Parisian elephant.

My name is Mona Dashwood. I'm 30 years old, a singleton and hopelessly in debt. You may have seen my byline as the Overpriced Shoe Columnist for The Imprudent Bostonian. Last year, I caused a minor stir in journalism circles for having used the word "shopgasm" 92 times in a single article. Everyone said it was a record, at least until the next issue of Lucky came out.

Did I mention I'm unmarried?

My friends think I'm "quirky," but when I wear cheap jeans my bottom looks like a sack of half-deflated soccer balls. That's why I spent $1,000 at Saks on Sevens last week even though my bank account contains $16.74. I've never heard of the term "psychological compensation."

Oh my God! It's 12:30, and I promised to meet Wanda for alcohol (as many units as possible, please!). Throwing on a sleeveless white T-shirt (the Row) and my second-best shorts (Balenciaga), I run out of the hotel, only stopping at a darling little boutique to buy three captain's chairs and an antique barometer.

"Good morning, dear," says Wanda, my slutty best friend, handing me a Bloody Mary the size of Lake Michigan. Glen, my gay best friend, is engrossed in my latest masterpiece: a 22-page feature on beige peep-toes. Yolanda, my black best friend, isn't here. Then a man walks into the café, looking like a lost rabbit, except with really gorgeous thighs.

The Scrod Supremacy

Col. Buck Scrod, U.S. Navy (ret.), Silver Star, Distinguished Service Medal, Purple Heart, PhD in military science from West Point, resident "Counterterrorism Heartthrob" on FOX & Friends, author of the best-selling memoir Shoots, Shoots and Leaves: A Navy SEAL's Tour of Duty in Iraq, Grandmaster of the Order of the Knights Templar, winner of the Heisman Trophy, The Price Is Right showcase showdown and the Quidditch World Cup, walked into the café. He wore a Black Dog T-shirt and bicycle shorts the color of his eyes: sun-dappled ocean blue, swelling with memories of love. Mona Dashwood noticed that his bicycle shorts swelled, too.

Buck Scrod had once known love. Love between a man and his soulmate. Love between a man and his soulmate, whom he took on a holiday to a plutonium-and-fireworks factory that went weirdly, inexplicably wrong. Buck Scrod had lost love.

Now, across the mozzarella bar, he saw a vision in shopping bags. Her hair was the color of the machine oil that used to drip out of his M-16 after a vigorous rubbing; her skin was the color of purest SPF 15 collagen moisturizer with shea butter. She was wearing some sort of a dress or something. He didn't know. All he knew was that when he walked past her she smelled like soap. Like innocence. Like a time before that awful day in the plutonium-and-fireworks factory...

"They say that love can't strike twice in the same heart," thought Buck Scrod. "Or is that angina? Whatever. She's hot."

2:34 pm: Nantucket outside the Crusty Whaler Antique Shoppe

I have just bought a $500 stuffed pelican, and am walking to meet Wanda and Glen for drinkies when I see my horrible ex, Johnnie "Cad" Cadwallader. He has his arm around some blonde tart with gruesome manufactured breasts, and he's climbing into one of those sports cars that look like weird fish, but that cost a million dollars. Cad is rich and evil. I can't believe I slept with him.

Actually, until he robbed me of my dignity and broke my heart, I kind of liked sleeping with him. But then he cheated on me with the entire population of Norway. Jerk.

"Yo! Dashwood!" calls a voice. I look up, and evil Cad is leaning out the window of his evil Porsche. "You look great! Those jeans make your ass look fant...asstic! Really great, babe. Give me a call and we'll do, uh..." He makes a cocktail-drinking motion with his hand, then does something nasty with his pelvis. At least, I think it's a drinking motion. Oh God.

My heart flutters like a half-stomped butterfly. Did I mention I'm unmarried?

"Excuse me, ma'am," says another voice, gentler, but as masculine as gym socks. "I think you dropped this."

It's the cute guy from the mozzarella bar, and he has my stuffed pelican. I must have dropped it when I tried to duck behind a fire hydrant to avoid Cad. The cute guy holds up the dead bird like proffered dignity. I take it, and our fingers touch across the formaldehyde-laced feathers, the jagged stitching and the lifeless, opaque eyeball. Could it be? Could he be...?

Scrodstorm Rising

Later, as they walked hand in hand along the beach, the smell of the ocean lulled them like a fine narcotic, administered through a golden needle to the soul.

"It's just..."

"Yes?"

"I've never said this to a girl."

"Yes, yes?"

Buck sighed. "I think you, alone of all women, can teach me to love again. You can heal my spiritual wounds and reshape my flinty character into something fuzzy and compliant, like a bunny."

"Oh. Sure. I'd like that."

They lay together on the sand and talked about their favorite things: modern Jane Austen adaptations, uplifting film montages set to Diana Ross or Aretha Franklin songs, diverse best friends, dinner parties that go hilariously wrong but somehow turn out just right by the time the overcooked soufflé makes its punch line appearance. Vodka.

As they gazed at the expensive Nantucket stars, they told each other secrets: how she had suffered through an internship at a famous fashion magazine under an abusive editor, how she had given testimony at the trial that sent the Prada-wearing bitch to jail; he told her how he liked to whisper soothing nothings into the ears of farm animals. Later, they strolled down to the beach and wrote a note that they stuck into an empty bottle of Prosecco. It read:

"I will always love you, Mona. Signed, Buck." Mona signed it, too.

Then she tossed it into the darkness, feeling a little guilty at not recycling. There was a sickening thump and the howl of a seal. They lay down and made love on a patch of endangered island lichen, utterly squashing it.

Noon: Nantucket in my gorgeous suite at the Clamjammer

God, I can't believe I slept with him on the first date. Still, he is cute, in that bad-boy-but-not-too-bad way that's so endearing, like a castrated Rottweiler. He reminds me of the guy in that book I like so much... what is it called? The Abercrombie & Fitch catalog.

He's perfect! He's sensitive—he spends his weekends taking photographs of New England covered bridges, for goodness' sake. He's endearing in the way he likes to stand naked in a dark room, listening to Foreigner's "Eye of the Tiger" over and over while strapping on weaponry and doing freaky tai chi moves. And (gulp!) he's got a brownstone on Comm. Ave., a condo in Manhattan and an English manor with a deer park and 300 Smurfs! Or was that serfs? Whatever. He's perfect.

I just hope he's not a violent lunatic. Oh my God, he takes photographs of New England covered bridges! No. No, that just makes him sensitive.

I can't wait to show him off to Wanda and Glen and Yolanda and my credit card account manager!

The Hunt for Red Scrodtober

"Ah, Colonel Scrod. So we meet again!" The swarthy gentleman in a linen suit doffed his Panama hat. Buck flared his manly, American nostrils. He was drinking a fashionable cocktail of rum infused with local cranberries, gunpowder and bluefin tuna. A small-plates menu stood open on the enoteca table. Mona was late for their luncheon date.

"Dubois," he grunted. "What are you doing here?"

"Same as you, I expect," smiled the foreigner, his teeth greasy with insinuations. "We are alike, you and I. We are brilliant. Ruthless. Archaeology is our god! And we both seek the Holy Grail!"

"Eh, no. Sorry." Dubois looked unhappy about this.

"The lost island of Atlantis?" Buck shook his head. "Bluebeard's treasure? The Lindbergh baby? An affordable steak dinner in the South End?"

"Nope. I'm here on vacation."

Dubois pouted, then turned to leave. "We shall meet again, Colonel Scrod!" he cried, pronouncing the word col-oh-nel, like an asshole. Then he swept out in a poof of $150-per-ounce scent.

"Who was that?" said Mona, sitting down in a poof of $200-per-ounce scent.

"Just my arch-nemesis," yawned Buck. "I think I'll order the quail eggs."

Later, as they lay in the postcoital damp of Mona's bedroom quilts, Buck picked up his cell phone. It was chirping Kate Bush's "Wuthering Heights" in honor of Dick Cheney's favorite karaoke song. United States military-industrial complex, read the caller ID.

"Scrod here."

"Sorry to bother you on vacation, Buck," said the familiar voice of General Silas Van Moose, Buck's old mentor. Good man, Van Moose. Used a carpenter's bevel to cut his hair and thought nachos were unpatriotic. His call could only mean one thing: Trouble. Or Terror. Or maybe Treason.

"The President needs you, Buck," growled Van Moose. "An Islamo-fascist-enviro terrorist cell has infiltrated Nantucket. They're erecting wind turbines in a dastardly attempt to undermine democracy and ruin ocean sunset vistas. Only you can stop them before they lower beachfront property values." Buck sighed and placed the phone gently on the nightstand, but still managed to shatter a genuine artisan-crafted scrimshaw ashtray. Mona yelped.

"Sorry about your traditional Yankee craftwork," he mumbled, slapping on camouflage paint and stuffing a satchel full of plastic explosives. He snapped a fresh cartridge into his Luger, then paused by the door.

"I'm, uh, going out for ice. I'll be back in a few."

7:54 pm: Nantucket at Le Fesse Bistro and Pinot Noir Bar

Déjà vu all over again. My heart feels like it's been muddled in a cocktail shaker with a shot of pain and extra bitters.

"The man is a pustule," says Wanda. "An oozing scum monkey from the poisoned crack of hell."

"I'll bet he voted for Bush," says Glen. "Twice."

"Did I hear someone call for a knight in shining armor?" grins Cad, swaggering over with a bottle of Moët in the crook of his arm. "Feeling drunk and vulnerable, Dashwood? I hope so. Because I'm feeling altogether excited. In my pants!"

I'm too defeated to bother protesting as Cad shoos my friends away and fills my glass.

"Here's to a fulfilling relationship, blah, blah, blah," says Cad. "Where's your room key?"

"Ahem."

Then Buck is standing in front of us, wearing a wet suit and a halo of cordite smoke. In one hand, he clutches the recovered technical plans to the Cape Cod missile defense system. In his other hand he clutches a single thornless rose.

"Am I interrupting?"

"I'll say you are, buddy," sneers Cad. "I'm trying to mount this filly, if you don't mind."

"Oh. Sorry." Buck starts to walk away.

Gosh. I can't do this. He brought me flowers, which means he's thoughtful and considerate and different from all the others! I leave Cad dry-humping the table and jump into Buck's damp, rubber-clad arms.

We walk out onto Jetties Beach under the orange glow of the burning wind turbines. Stinger missiles arc across the sky like party streamers, and as we kiss a phosphorus bomb goes off on the terrorists' yacht, raining shiny confetti across Nantucket Sound.

"I want it always to be like this," I whisper. The sea breeze carries the distant screams of bad guys, like the coos of mating doves.

"Well, we've got about 15 seconds before North Korea retaliates for what I just did," shrugs Buck. And I believe him.

One-Hibachi Hit

A meal to make other men weep

By Rich Levine
Photograph by Dave Bradley

Like sexual stamina and poker prowess, grilling separates the men from the boys. This season, we decided to step up our game with a foolproof recipe that would distinguish us from the pack. We turned to chef Andy Husbands, owner of local restaurants Tremont 647 and Sister Sorel, and coauthor of The Fearless Chef: Innovative Recipes From the Edge of American Cuisine. His task: Create an upscale meal that could easily be prepared at the beach. But there was a twist: We wanted to cook every ingredient at the same time, on one little hibachi—because hauling a Weber to the shore just wasn't going to happen. What follows is Husbands' appetizing answer.

Grilled tuna with sweet potato salad and asparagus

Serves four as an entree

For Dressing
3 tbsp honey
1 tbsp dijon mustard
3 tbsp fresh lime juice (about two limes)
2 tbsp soy sauce
1 tbsp sesame oil
2 tbsp sake
1 tsp chili flakes

For Veggies and Tuna
2 large sweet potatoes, washed
1 pound asparagus, bottoms peeled and blanched
4 six-ounce sushi-quality tuna steaks
¼ cup canola oil
¼ cup chives, minced
1 small red onion, small diced
1 green bell pepper, small diced
2 tbsp sesame seeds, toasted kosher salt and freshly cracked black pepper to taste
¼ cup loose cilantro leaves
1 lime cut into four wedges

1. Place the dressing ingredients in a small bowl and mix well. Set aside until needed.

2. Put the sweet potatoes in a deep saucepan, cover in cold water and place over high heat. Boil for 15 to 20 minutes, until a fork glides in smoothly. Remove potatoes from pan and cool, then slice into ½-inch-thick disks.

3. Light your grill to medium-high heat. When you can't keep your hand 10 inches above the fire for more than five seconds, it's time to start cooking.

4. Lightly coat the tuna steaks, asparagus and sliced sweet potatoes with canola oil, and season with kosher salt and freshly cracked black pepper. Place the tuna steaks on the grill and cook, without moving, until desired doneness is achieved (about two to three minutes per side for rare). While the tuna is cooking, grill the sweet potatoes and asparagus for about one to two minutes per side, rolling the asparagus, until they have light grill marks on them.

5. Add the chives, red onion, green pepper and sesame seeds to the dressing. When ready to plate, place the grilled potatoes like shingles and lay the asparagus over them on the side. Evenly spoon the sauce over top. Slice each piece of tuna into four equal parts and layer over the potatoes and asparagus. Garnish with cilantro leaves and a lime wedge. Eat. Yum.

It's a seasonal leisure dilemma: hit the beach or go to that big summer show? Save time and gas money by doing both. While New England concerts aren't actually staged on the sand as they are in California or Florida, many upcoming headliners will appear at venues or festivals a seashell's throw from the ocean.

"A lot of times, we just hang out by the beach because of the venues," singer-guitarist Susan Tedeschi says. She and her guitarist husband, Derek Trucks of the Allman Brothers Band, will bring their kids when they colead their 11-piece Soul Stew Revival at such coastal spots as the Casino Ballroom, the Cape Cod Melody Tent and the Gathering of the Vibes. "I love the ocean," says Tedeschi, who grew up in Norwell on the South Shore, "so I guess I'm a water girl."

Rob Derhak, singer-bassist of jam-rockers Moe, agrees that both musicians and fans benefit from beach proximity. This summer, Moe is playing two nights at the Cape Cod Melody Tent, followed by performances at Maine State Pier in Portland. It makes sense for a group that has also staged shows at ski resorts and even launched its own Caribbean cruises.

"We're like cruise directors for the fans," Derhak says. "We're trying to put on this little mini-vacation for them and have other things to do besides just see Moe."

Summer tents are still booking perennials like Lyle Lovett, Gretchen Wilson and the Beach Boys, but more alternative bands are cracking all-ages venues, drawing younger fans as well as their parents. Check out our tour of concert spots near the beach, with highlights from their schedules.

Casino Ballroom
Hampton Beach, N.H.

You can't get much closer to the beach than this roomy roadhouse on the Ocean Boulevard strip. Step across the street, and your feet hit the sand. Its concert history is also unrivaled—from Glenn Miller and Duke Ellington, to Janis Joplin and Led Zeppelin, to Talking Heads and U2. With shows switching between reserved-table seating and general admission depending on the act, the 2,000-capacity club's schedule is especially broad and busy this season.

This Cape institution is nearly identical to its sister theater, Cohasset's South Shore Music Circus, which shares its 2,250-seat capacity and books many of the same artists on adjoining nights. Both family-friendly venues sport in-the-round tents with revolving stages, a novel setting to see certain rock acts. In the middle of Martha's Vineyard at the airport, this comfy, multitiered club belies its capacity of 846. Originally the Hot Tin Roof, which opened in 1979 and was owned by Carly Simon, Outerland is retaining an eclectic gumbo of local and national rock, folk and reggae (even the indie hip-hop experiments of RJD2). Newport Festivals
Newport, R.I.

There are few views as striking as the bridge and sailboats of Newport Harbor that musicians see from the stage at Fort Adams State Park. Match that with a storied history—from Bob Dylan going electric to seminal turns by John Coltrane—and the Newport folk and jazz festivals leave an indelible mark. After taking over for impresario George Wein, a new promoter is expanding the borders of folk. But as long as Phish phans and Parrotheads don't swamp the site when Trey Anastasio and Jimmy Buffett deliver uncharacteristic solo acoustic sets, the Fort Adams legacy looks safe. And if that's not enough snap for Newport, the Snapple Sunset Music Series is bringing bands to the downtown waterfront.

NOTES FROM THE UNDERBELLY

CONFESSIONS OF A 42-YEAR-OLD GO-GO BOY

BY JONATHAN SOROFF
PHOTOGRAPHS BY MIKE CASEY AND KELLY DAVIDSON

Me and my big, f*ing mouth. A few months back, I was approached by Joan Parker, the Cambridge philanthropist and wife of best-selling mystery novelist Robert B., not to mention a woman you just don't say "no" to. She had a favor to ask: Would I be on the committee for ClimActs!—the annual fundraiser for the Theater Offensive? It's an aptly named organization, dedicated to presenting plays with GLBT themes. Having attended the party in the past, I knew it was a racy affair (nearly naked, body-painted acrobats performed during the cocktail hour one year, and an auction item has been the chance to act as a "fluffer" on the set of a gay porn film). Being one martini shy of my wits, I responded, "Of course, Joan. Not only will I be on the committee; I'll be one of the go-go boys!"

This from a man who's been lamenting his ever-expanding waistline since seeing the far side of 40 two years ago. Not that my physique was grotesque or anything. It's just that most of the people who regularly saw me squirming around in my underwear were more likely to apologize for a cold stethoscope than to stuff my crotch with dollar bills. In fact, after one of my oldest friends stopped commenting on my "back fat" whenever she hugged me, I asked her why, and she said, "Because now you have front fat." To a middle-aged gay man (who, let's face it, has all the vanity of an insecure teenaged girl but none of the self-discipline that might enable him to develop an eating disorder), that was like hearing a grim prognosis from a world-famous oncologist.

And now I'd gone and promised to gyrate in public wearing nothing but my skivvies. If that wasn't jackassery, I don't know what is.

It occurred to me that I could call Joan Parker and explain that I'd been joking, but for what seemed like eons, I'd routinely whined to my long-suffering (and enviably younger) boyfriend: "I don't want to look good for 42. I want to look good, period." Why not take the opportunity to see if I could get into Speedo shape before swimsuit season arrived? If it worked, great. And if not, there'd be some jiggly, madcap hilarity at the fundraiser as I shook my unsightly ass onstage. After all, the self-defeating little voice in my head constantly invoked the oft-repeated "wisdom" that after 40, your metabolism inevitably slows, that it's impossible to stay in top form, and that entropy takes over in the long, slow decline toward long hairs sprouting from the ears and the need for adult diapers.

Enter Stephen Cabral, a personal trainer with a studio in the South End. Besides appearances on MTV and an elite clientele that includes such hard-bodied types as members of the Celtics dancers, he'd just published a book on exercise and nutrition. I offered him a challenge: to whip me into go-go boy shape in three weeks. Shockingly, he accepted, sight unseen. To make the whole thing a bit less grisly for the audience (and to strengthen my resolve), I also enlisted my friend Ricardo Rodriguez. A pneumatic Colombian, he's one of those absurdly attractive physical specimens, with enough of a sense of humor that he agreed to join me in my folly when I asked him to dance with me. Now there was no turning back.

During my first session with Steve, he weighed me and measured assorted body parts, including my waist, which I was dismayed to learn was a full three inches bigger than the lie I routinely told sales people when trying on trousers. This made me feel like a cross between Orson Welles and a balloon in the Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade. According to Steve, my nutrition and exercise regimen were a bit stricter than he would normally recommend, given the drastic nature of the situation. I was going to work out like a Spartan and abstain from high glycemic-index carbohydrates (which basically means all that's good in life, like alcohol and ice cream).

For the first few days, I twitched at the sight of a martini and bitched relentlessly about the grueling workouts and my aching muscles, especially in my butt, which seemed to be taking the bulk of the abuse. Although Steve's exercise regimen was faster and more efficient than my old routine at the gym, it was brutal, which is to say, effective. Every time I sat down or got up from a chair, I made old-man noises, and while the nutritional aspect was no great hardship (I rather like rabbit food), I kvetched and kvelled as if I were being force-fed cow patties. It quickly became apparent that this whole thing was going to be much harder on my poor boyfriend (who gallantly joined me in my new regimen) than it was on me.

The second week went by quickly, but the true test of willpower came when we went to my father's house in New York for Passover. Pun most definitely intended, I was obliged to pass over some of my favorite foods—chopped liver on matzoh, brisket with horseradish, macaroons. I couldn't even drink the four cups of wine that God Himself tells Jews they have to, for Christ's sake! (Pardon the apostasy.) In short, it sucked.

Then came the home stretch, the third week, when Steve broke the news to me that my diet was getting even stricter.

"If it doesn't walk, swim or fly, and isn't green, don't eat it," he said. "You're best off sticking to grilled chicken breasts on a bed of spinach."

While I'd enjoy that particular repast every once in a while, being condemned to such a narrow culinary repertoire enabled me to empathize with those long-ago prison inmates in Boston who rioted because they were sick of eating lobster. To make matters worse, Steve and his wife took off for a Hawaiian vacation, leaving me to be worked over by his associate,

[redacted]

I was by no stretch of the imagination an underwear model.

Josh Feinman. I won't bore you with the grisly details of that last rigorous period, which passed in glacial slo-mo, except to say that Josh is a great guy and chicken on spinach blows royal chunks after a day or two.

On the Friday before my go-go boy debut, Josh took my stats, and I was amazed by the results. In just 18 days, I'd lost 12.2 pounds, my body fat was down 3.1 percent and I'd taken almost four inches off my waist. I was by no stretch of the imagination an underwear model, but clothing I'd given up on wearing ever again now fit me the way it originally had (negating the necessity to constantly curse the dry-cleaner for shrinking things). Ready or not, it was showtime.

Ricardo and I had bought matching underwear, and the day of the event, we rehearsed inside our go-go cage for all of five minutes. (Like skinning a cat, there are just so many ways you can shake your ass.) Upon arriving at the party, I was chagrined to see two (professional) Adonises atop pedestals, warming up the crowd by humping thin air, wearing shorts that were being asked to do way more than underwear ought to be expected to. Here I should also mention that over the past few weeks, my friend Tony Corey had said, "I can see Jonathan doing something this hare-brained. I just can't understand him doing it next to Ricardo," while my friend Duncan Hughes, during dinner, had said, "Ricardo's dancing, too? What are you doing with a fork in your hand?!?"

Ricardo, true to Latin-charmer form, reassured me that I looked great, which I supposed was something. After downing a few vodka shots—ah, sweet elixir of life and giver of courage!—we changed into our matching underwear and wife-beaters, and like Christians about to become lion-meat, climbed into our go-go cage, accompanied by a flattering (if a bit optimistic) intro. We'd chosen to grind to House of Pain's "Jump Around" (my favorite dance tune). As it began, I reached over and ripped off Ricardo's shirt, and he returned the favor, to some hooting and hollering from the crowd. The next three minutes passed in a blur, as we shimmied and shook, trying to entice the audience to pad our shorts with cash (Ricardo insisted on nothing smaller than 20s).

Between adrenaline and alcohol, I remember little of the actual dancing, except for thinking, "Thank God my mother isn't alive to see this." Afterward, exhilarated and relieved at not having completely humiliated ourselves, we ran upstairs to change back into our clothes and count our earnings. My total: 50-some-odd bucks. Ricardo's: $170 and change. So what did I learn from this whole experience, you may ask? Two very important lessons: 1) A good personal trainer can get even a 42-year-old sloth like me into decent shape; and 2) I'm ready for the beach this summer, but I'm not going with Ricardo. ✖✖✖

Do rock cut-offs at an appropriate length.

Don't go skins—unless you're Beckham.

Don't bring your own shade.

Don't ever wear a skirt with socks.

Do pair a sundress with a light jacket.

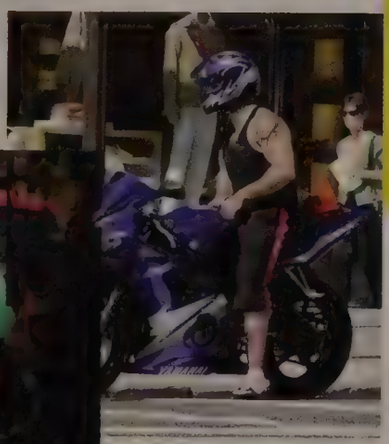
Trend we'd like to see go: the year-round wool cap.

Don't show the wrong cleavage.

Don't pair a T-shirt with Uggs and a fur-trim vest.

Do ride your Yamaha with a tank top and tribal tattoo.



Don't pull a Britney.

Do sport this season's favorite color: yellow.

Don't wear a denim headband around your waist.

Do fight the rays with an adorable sun hat.

Baby Mama ★★ ½ Fans of Tina Fey's self-deprecating pratfalls on her terrific sitcom 30 Rock will be surprised at just how stiff and unconvincing she is on the big screen playing straight woman to Amy Poehler's trashy surrogate in this uneven farce from former SNL writer Michael McCullers. No points for guessing that Fey's bland career woman learns to loosen up thanks to Poehler's pee-in-the-sink rambunctiousness, but does the odious legacy of Adam Sandler dictate that every modern comedy starring SNL cast members must end with a schmaltzy courtroom confrontation? Burlington native Poehler gives her all to an erratically written character, but she's more successful in the earlier comedic scenes than the later sappy stuff. Indifferently photographed and poorly staged, the movie remains watchable thanks largely to an overqualified roster of supporting players, especially Sigourney Weaver's condescending executive and a marvelous turn from Steve Martin that's easily the funniest thing he's done in years. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Chronicles of Narnia: Prince Caspian ★ What a violent and ugly militaristic slog this is! Sucking all the wonder out of CS Lewis' novel, director Andrew Adamson blew $100 million on special effects without mustering a single memorable image. Even the sunlight is pale and wan as those bratty, fairly indistinguishable Pevensie children return to their formerly enchanted fairyland to find that 1,300 years have passed and everybody's trapped in some sort of downcast Bored of the Rings with a bit of Hamlet in there, too. Ben Barnes makes Orlando Bloom seem captivating as the tedious title character who seeks vengeance and leads chintzy elfin creatures against some disturbing, racially coded baddies. There's no surprise, delight or anything resembling levity here, just one grim battle after another rendered in Adamson's hacky medium shots and close-ups. The light-skinned true-believers slaughter legions of swarthy, bearded, darker-hued heathens, all in preparation for the second coming of a lion (Jesus, as voiced by Liam Neeson) who doles out some even meaner divine retribution. Onward, Christian soldiers. Next stop: The Crusades, or Iran. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Forgetting Sarah Marshall ★★★ This filthy, winning comedy is the latest from producer Judd Apatow's seemingly inexhaustible well of schlubby guys, impossibly hot women and embarrassing sexual shenanigans. Jason Segel, who also penned the screenplay, stars as a heartbroken lummox running away to Hawaii in the wake of a bad breakup—only to find himself at the same resort as his ex (and her new beau, naturally.) It's a nifty hook, and Segel gets away with some astoundingly dirty jokes by approaching every scene with an almost child-like enthusiasm. His specialty consists of a snark-free delivery that's all the more hilarious for its ardor. Capably, if unexceptionally directed by Nicholas Stoller, Forgetting Sarah Marshall meanders a bit before building to a climax that offers more smiles than belly laughs. But that spirit of affection is what lingers when the lights come up. It's actually a pleasure spending time with these people, which is a rare feeling at the movies these days. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Iron Man ★★★ "I'm not really the hero type," quips Robert Downey Jr. with a glint in his eye, helpfully summing up this picture's off-kilter appeal in a nifty nutshell. The movie itself is well-assembled, fairly standard stuff, and there's not a plot point that won't feel familiar if you've sat through any of the billion or so comic book adaptations released in the past 10 years. Yet, somehow, Downey's snarky presence in the lead makes it seem like a wonderful act of subversion. According to formula, Iron Man winds up playing it safe and hitting all the expected, crowd-pleasing beats, but the movie works best if you consider it as an outsized chronicle of its star's own recent redemption—one of those weird pop culture artifacts in which actors comment upon themselves and their careers. Like Lindsay Lohan's I Know Who Killed Me, except not horrible. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Persepolis ★★★½ Buoyant and irreverent, Marjane Satrapi's best-selling coming-of-age comic book memoir springs to life as the simplicity of black-and-white line drawings trump the computer-generated marvels we've grown accustomed to. Growing up as an outspoken female in Iran sounds like the formula for a movie far less lively, but the tone boasts a sardonic wit matching that of its spitfire heroine. (No surprise then that Satrapi directed the film along with French animator Vincent Paronnaud.) Her childhood memories of the Shah's fall and the subsequent rise of Islamic fundamentalism offer a refreshing, humanistic point of view on Middle Eastern history. Young Satrapi's punk-rock attitude and black-market Iron Maiden cassettes lead to a

NEW CHARM, OLD HAT

Indiana Jones and the Kingdom of the Crystal Skull

David James

STAR WARS FANS STILL SMARTING from the mess George Lucas made of their childhood memories had plenty to worry about when they heard Dr. Henry Jones Jr. would be returning to movie screens 19 years after 1989's underwhelming Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade. Harrison Ford has spent the ensuing decades sleepwalking through ever-crustier variations on his angry-dad persona, while Steven Spielberg made movies for grown-ups, most recently hitting a career high with the chilling Munich. Do these three have it in them to recapture Raiders of the Lost Ark's giddy, popcorn exuberance?

Yes, but only intermittently. The awkwardly titled Indiana Jones and the Kingdom of the Crystal Skull turns out to be a serviceable nostalgia piece. I'm not sure there's any compelling reason for its existence, but as the summer selection grows cluttered with visually incoherent behemoths, Indy's relative modesty is disarming, and the commitment to old-fashioned craftsmanship commendable. It's a fun night out at the movies, no more than that—but certainly no less.

A phenomenal opening sequence reframes the Indiana Jones iconography for 1957. The series' standard dissolve out of the Paramount mountain logo upends our expectations, and Elvis Presley's "Hound Dog" rudely barges in on John Williams' score. But Indy is still Indy, and Spielberg relishes every moment of his entrance by doling out individual close-ups on the hat, the dusty boot and finally that immortal silhouette before getting down to business.

It's Russians instead of Nazis this installment, and Cate Blanchett has a grand time chewing the scenery as the devilish Irina Spalko, Stalin's most bodacious babe and an advocate of some sort of psychic mind-control mumbo-jumbo. (Narrative clarity is not this picture's strong suit.) She and her commie goons have been poking around Area 51, very much interested in artifacts Indy investigated in Roswell, N.M. Better dead than Red, our Indiana only offers them a snarled: "I like Ike."

Though grayer and grouchier, Ford relaxes into the role like it's his favorite easy chair. Before long the fists are flying, the bullwhip's cracking and the acceptable standards of preposterousness are set once the resourceful Indiana escapes a nuclear blast by hiding inside a lead-lined Harrison Ford relaxes into the role like it's his favorite easy chair.

Frigidaire. It's all cartoon silliness, but that doesn't mean it's not amusing.

Along for the ride this time is Shia LaBeouf's Mutt Williams, a greaser who makes the same entrance as Marlon Brando in The Wild One and spends an awful lot of time on his hair. On one hand, it's easy to resent the kid as a strategic marketing sop to a demographic not even born when the first films were released, but he's also a heck of a lot less annoying than Temple of Doom's Short Round.

There's much to do about a crystal skull of extraterrestrial origin, which seems a bit out of whack until you consider the ways the earlier flicks mined pulp traditions of the 1930s. The filmmakers don't push it, though. Funny how even aliens hide stuff in booby-trapped caverns filled with creepy-crawlies.

This been-there, done-that quality starts to drag down the middle, but the picture gets a welcome blast of energy from the return of Karen Allen's Marion Ravenwood. Her hard-drinking tomboy was always the only girl good enough for Indy, and Ford's performance perks up considerably once the two resume their screwball bickering. It's a kick watching these two get into trouble again, and before long we're on a roller coaster ride filled with bazookas, waterfalls, flesh-eating fire ants and a deceptively simple sequence set in quicksand that's so well played it provides both the picture's comic and emotional high point.

There's no shortage of sometimes-gaudy, computer-generated effects, including a shout-out to Close Encounters, but the straightforward stunts are where the magic is. Spielberg understands kinetic energy better than any filmmaker working today, and he stages his action sequences as elaborate feats of physical comedy. He doesn't bother trying to replicate the sense of danger we felt during Indy's first adventure, and parents will be pleased that there's nothing remotely resembling the second film's violent intensity. Crystal Skull is as jokey as Last Crusade, but it's a much tighter, sprightlier piece of filmmaking. Even as the screenplay begins to run out of gas, Spielberg keeps his foot planted firmly on the pedal. The movie clocks in at barely two hours, including credits, which is a heroic feat for a summer spectacle in this day and age.

Then again, this day and age wasn't what the moviemakers had in mind, as even Janusz Kaminski's cinematography takes great pains to mimic the work Douglas Slocombe did in the originals. Indiana Jones and the Kingdom of the Crystal Skull is an endearing throwback to a time when blockbusters wanted simply to entertain instead of batter us into submission. ✖✖✖ brief exile in Vienna before she returns and, quite movingly, attempts to assimilate into a culture where she's no longer welcome. Persepolis is funny, rambling and sad, and a welcome reminder that stubborn individualism can be found where we least expect it. (In the suburbs.)

Redbelt ★★ David Mamet's chest-thumping mannerisms finally calcify into self-parody in this occasionally bonkers martial arts saga. The great Chiwetel Ejiofor stars as a monkish proprietor of a struggling jujitsu academy. He's an almost comically messianic character who speaks exclusively in aphorisms, and only Ejiofor's natural grace keeps the audience from rolling their eyes. Beset on all sides by corrosive Hollywood phonies (including the surprisingly OK Tim Allen), crooked fight promoters and shrill, turncoat women, Ejiofor's tedious beacon of purity navigates a klutzy maze of double-crosses that feels like Mamet leafing through his greatest-hits catalog. But the labyrinthine plot is more implausible and less inventive than we've come to expect from him. Worse, his staccato profanities aren't even particularly quotable this time around. Even the trademark misogyny seems half-hearted. What's left is Mamet's puzzlingly earnest adoration of a modern man living his life according to ancient warrior codes. It's like Jim Jarmusch's Ghost Dog, only without the jokes. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Roman de Gare ★★ ½ In what turns out to be half of a nifty little thriller (with the other half being a pseudo-intellectual wank), veteran director Claude Lelouch has fun toying with audience expectations and preconceptions before the game finally gets away from him. The invaluable Dominique Pinon gets a too-rare leading role as a man of mystery who rescues flighty, abandoned Huguette (Audrey Dana) from a highway rest stop. Is Pinon that famous serial killer who just broke out of prison? Or is he just a mousy bookworm who walked out on his wife? Lelouch teases our prejudices, wringing an hour or so of great suspense from simple interactions. But then the film goes kerflooey by dragging in Fanny Ardant as a murderous novelist and piling unnecessary meta-commentaries on top of some none-too-deep profundities. Pinon and Dana's tentative, dangerous courtship is far more fascinating than the ensuing, self-impressed twaddle. In French with English subtitles. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Shine a Light ★★★ What was once rebellious eventually becomes part of the establishment. This isn't a slight, just a simple fact of life, and it's one that Martin Scorsese seems to have grown comfortable with, judging from his exuberant, if inessential, Rolling Stones concert documentary. Having enlisted an army of the world's most formidable cinematographers, including Children of Men's Emmanuel Lubeszki, There Will Be Blood's Robert Elswit and even Gimme Shelter's Albert Maysles, Scorsese has 17 cameras trained closely on the action. Shot over two nights at New York's Beacon Theatre in the fall of 2006, the concert is a mixed bag. "Jumpin' Jack Flash," "Satisfaction" and especially that tedious Microsoft anthem, "Start Me Up," are rote at best. But Shine a Light discovers magic in lesser-known tracks from Exile on Main St. and Some Girls, often capturing intimate onstage moments as Mick and the boys seem to truly enjoy playing the numbers they aren't forced to perform every damn night. (In the suburbs.)

Heavy Meta

Espionage à Trois

Dominique Pinon stars as the morally ambiguous protoganist in Claude Lelouch's Roman de Gare.

Speed Racer ★★ ½ This summer's designated critical whipping-boy is indeed a bit garish and about twice as long as it needs to be, but anyone who's ever seen a Matrix movie will tell you that the Wachowski Brothers have a knack for gumming up simple sagas in endless, expository convolutions. To that end, Speed Racer is the first kiddie flick to contain diatribes about corporate sponsorship and make stock market manipulation central to the plot. Yet as far as pure visual expression goes, this is genuinely groundbreaking, with folding flashbacks, cross-cuts and simultaneous planes of action forming a whizzing barrage of breathtaking images. With real-life actors existing quite comfortably in an almost entirely computer-generated universe, this often tacky, weirdly heartfelt movie is perhaps best appreciated by children, who are more likely to respond to the sleek pictorial storytelling without paying mind to the Wachowski's usual messianic jibber-jabber. These guys could be geniuses if they ever get out of their own way. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Standard Operating Procedure ★★ Cambridge's own Errol Morris has a passionate and devoted following, but his glossy, ponderous documentaries can be annoying, too often placing portentous aesthetics where the nuts-and-bolts journalism should be. Morris' take on Abu Ghraib can't be bothered with investigative legwork. He presents a muddled timeline and allows the disgraced soldiers to make long excuses into the lens, much like the "confessions" of reality show contestants. Content to skim the shiny surfaces of national embarrassment, Morris dodges all important questions of responsibility and instead focuses on sophomoric musings about "the nature of photography" more fitting for a stoned dorm room bull session. Standard Operating Procedure is preoccupied with tasteless reenactments that make ghastly war crimes look like perfume commercials, repetitive and goofy symbolic close-ups of inanimate objects and Danny Elfman's numbing musical flatulence. Morris has reduced one of our nation's darkest hours to a pretentious art-school project. (At Kendall Square.)

21 ★ ½ The local legend about the MIT students who made a fortune counting cards gets the glossy big-screen treatment. Across the Universe's simpering Jim Sturgess stars as a gullible math whiz named Ben Campbell (Jeff Ma in real life; gee, I wonder why they changed that?) who's seduced by his slick professor (Kevin Spacey) into spending weekends bringing down the house in Sin City. Screenwriters Peter Steinfeld and Allan Loeb employ every tired cliché, and romantic comedy director Robert Luketic keeps the pace moving at such a crawl that you're always half an hour ahead of the characters. Sturgess is an empty vessel, conjuring zero chemistry with love interest Kate Bosworth. Spacey phones in his tired snide scoundrel routine, while Laurence Fishburne hams it up as a casino security expert. Shot in hi-def video, the movie often appears smeared and out of focus, neon lights blurring together like the indistinct characters. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The Visitor ★★★ ½ Wonderful character actor Richard Jenkins finally gets a chance to shine as a leading man in writer-director Tom McCarthy's warm, beautifully understated New York story. Jenkins stars as a gruff, emotionally constipated college professor who strikes up an unlikely friendship with a Syrian immigrant (Haaz Sleiman) and begins to reconnect with his better self, finally venturing out in bustling Greenwich Village and even learning how to play the African drum. As in his delightful debut film, The Station Agent, McCarthy demonstrates a rare gift for observing behavior, allowing his characters to grow and letting their silences speak volumes. But just when you're settling in for yet another "white guy learns a lesson from minorities" homily, the film takes a sharp left turn into darker waters. Without getting preachy, the movie paints a vivid portrait of a post-9/11 America governed by confusion and fear. McCarthy never pushes the material, shrewdly understanding that Jenkins' sad eyes can tell the whole story. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Lost in Space

Star Children, Unite! The solar system's complexities may never be comprehended by us humans, tiny specks of life that we are. Which is why Stanley Kubrick's classic 2001: A Space Odyssey, showing at the Brattle Theatre on June 10, never gets old. The screening includes a discussion with scientists and film experts who'll talk about the movie's major themes of intergalactic travel and our limited understanding of the universe. Alas, we're told HAL had a previous commitment and won't be able to make it. Probably for the best.

THRILL ZONE

T Bone Burnett puts a killer pulse behind Plant and Krauss.

Robert Plant & Alison Krauss featuring T Bone Burnett play June 5 at the Bank of America Pavilion

Jesse Dylan

T BONE BURNETT lurks behind Robert Plant and Alison Krauss onstage like a Southern gothic mystery man. But Burnett's not a stranger to listeners of modern music. As the producer of last year's astounding Plant/Krauss disc Raising Sand, he created a genre-blurring environment as distinctive as the musicians who flirt in the deep folds of his sonic blanket.

"I love to put on a record and feel like I'm in the room with the people," says Burnett, who gave similar atmosphere to the Grammy-winning sound track to the Coen brothers' O Brother, Where Art Thou? as well as albums by Cassandra Wilson, Elvis Costello, Los Lobos and Bob Dylan. It was Dylan who launched the Texas native's career by hiring the lanky guitarist for his Rolling Thunder Revue in 1975.

"Looking back on it all, it's humbling I guess—not that I'm humble," Burnett, 60, says with a hearty laugh before playing New Orleans' Jazzfest as bandleader for Plant and Krauss. "But I must say that I haven't done anything like this since the Rolling Thunder Revue. The intensity of this thing is incredible. I get the same sense that I got from where Bob was at in the '70s—that kind of tension."

Granted, tension isn't the first thing that comes to mind with Raising Sand, where Led Zeppelin frontman Plant and Union Station bluegrass star Krauss inhabit a mutual zone with sublime, haunting harmonies. "They're just incredibly generous and secure artists," Burnett says. "Alison comes from probably the quietest band ever and Robert comes from probably the loudest band ever, and we shift back and forth between those areas."

The singers have really kicked it up a notch in concert. "They're going into completely new places live," he says. "Sometimes it sounds like animals out in the woods, just going off, with that hair-raising sound." And the same goes for the Burnett-directed ensemble of acoustic bassist Dennis Crouch, Boston-bred drummer Jay Bellerose, guitarist Buddy Miller and multi-instrumentalist Stuart Duncan, hitting the Bank of America Pavilion June 5.

"Everybody onstage is just killer," Burnett says. "Once again, I'm the worst person in the band." He shares his own talents as a singer-songwriter at mid-set, touching on his latest solo disc, Tooth of Crime. It's a dark, often tongue-in-cheek CD, musically and lyrically in league with Tom Waits or Morphine.

"It's a little incongruous," Burnett says of performing for audiences who are mostly unfamiliar with his work. "I never asked for the job of having to sing between Robert Plant and Alison Krauss either. That's a dirty, thankless job."

On a more crowd-pleasing note, the group retools a handful of Zeppelin nuggets, deconstructing the riff to "Black Dog" on a banjo. And Krauss' O Brother showpiece "Down to the River to Pray" is done as an a cappella quartet. "People scream through it," he says. "It's like a Pentecostal meeting."

Burnett says that he had wanted to produce a Krauss record since the singer-fiddler was a teenage prodigy, but he adds, "Forced things rarely turn out well, and things that happen of their own timing seem to work out much better."

The timing was right when Plant and Krauss called on him after several years of talking about collaboration. "What I tried to do more to help them figure out their [vocal] blend was to supply a pulse and a groove," says Burnett.

"The public has been so onto this notion of genre and category, and I've never bought that," he continues, adding that he looks at music from "the point of view of pure tone."

Burnett says he is hopeful there will be a Raising Sand sequel, though he has since kept busy producing for BB King and John Mellencamp. "Every record I've worked on, the artists have been very free," he says. "Everyone wants to do something different." ✖✖✖

Take Root

Walk On! Local band and charity enthusiasts the Adam Ezra Group are always willing to lend a helping hand (after all, one of their members was a firefighter). The acoustic rockers recently headlined radio station 92.9's Earthfest and have performed alongside the Goo Goo Dolls, Guster and Aerosmith. On June 8 the guys take the stage for United Cerebral Palsy's first annual Life Without Limits Walk at Artesani Park. Though they won't be participating in the 5K trek, they'll be sure to lift spirits with songs off their new album, View From the Root.

Beep Beep, Beep Beep, Yeah!

Sweet Ride Ever caught yourself drooling over a classic car as it rolls by on the road? Your infatuation might run to the purr of the engine, the leather interior or the thought of picking up babes in a Ferrari 250 GTO. Alan Bull expresses those thoughts in his auto-centric paintings and photography. His exhibition Drive My Car premieres at the Ferry Wharf Gallery with a June 1 artist reception and continues through the 15th. Just don't show up in a Pinto.
